OWNER'S MANUAL

These Constituency Profiles have been prepared for the Office of Public Awareness of the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) by the Northwest Regional Foundation of Spokane, Washington as an aide in communicating with the various organizations in Region 10 which are affected by EPA activities. The views expressed herein, except those attributed to individual organizations, are those of the preparer and do not necessarily correspond to those of the EPA. This Owner's Manual is intended to be a guide for users of these profiles. It will explain how the profiles were compiled, how they are organized, and how they might be used.

HOW THEY WERE COMPILED

EPA requested that we develop profiles of organizations in nine constituency areas. These areas are Agriculture, Business and Industry, Environment, Labor, Minorities, Public Interest, Urban, Women, and Youth. Our first step in preparing these profiles was to compile a list of the organizations in each constituency group in Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, the four states which comprise Region 10. In some cases, this was a fairly easy task. For instance, the State Department of Agriculture in Washington had a very complete list of the agricultural organizations in the state. This was generally true in each of the states for Agriculture, Business and Industry, Labor, and Environment. However, to the best of our knowledge, ours was the first attempt to assemble comprehensive lists of Minority, Urban, Women, and Youth organizations in each of the states. There has been no previous effort to compile any sort of list of Public Interest groups in the Region.

As a result, there are probably gaps in some of the lists. For instance, in Washington, we obtained lists of women's organizations from the Women's Resource Center in Spokane, the Seattle Office of Women's Rights, and the U.S. Department of Labor in its Directory for Reaching Minority and Women's Groups. Although we were told by several women's organizations that these were the most complete lists available, it seems to us that they can not contain all the Women's groups in the state. However, while we have inevitably missed some organizations in each of the constituency groups, this effort provides a starting point for any further expansion of the lists.

Once we had these lists in hand, we developed a questionnaire to be mailed to all the organizations that we had identified in each of the states. It requested basic information about each organization, such as phone number, contact person, number of members, main focus, and how it communicates with its members. Additionally, the questionnaire asked for information about the organization's environmental concerns. We also asked for their environmental priorities, any issues on which they had taken positions, a statement of EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed, and which, if any, of EPA program areas they would like to receive information about. A copy of the questionnaire is attached.

We mailed out a total of 3400 questionnaires: 470 in Alaska, 680 in Idaho, 975 in Oregon, and 1270 in Washington. A follow-up letter to all groups and phone calls to key organizations brought in 548 responses for a total response rate of 15.9%. This breaks down to 63 or 12.1% from Alaska, 139 or 20.1% from Idaho, 145 or 15.0% from Oregon, and 201 or 15.9% from Washington.

Once we had all the responses, we began to list them in the standard format of the individual profiles. This includes the name of the organization, its address and contact person, how it communicates with its members, organizational information, environmental priorities, and those EPA program areas about which it would like to be informed. We have also left space on the profiles for additional comments after "Further Contacts". In some cases, we summarized responses to make them easier to read, but in all cases, we maintained the original content and often quoted from the questionnaire directly.

Finally, we developed an introduction to each constituency group in each state. It was created through "facts and figures" research, phone calls to key leaders in each constituency group, and by summarizing the questionnaire responses.

HOW THE PROFILES ARE ORGANIZED

The profiles are divided into four volumes: one each for Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. These four volumes are further divided into nine separate sections, each corresponding to one of the nine constituency groups. These sections are arranged alphabetically, and each one contains:

1. An introduction to each constituency group which describes its characteristics, summarizes the environmental concerns of its members, and gives some ideas about how EPA might go about improving communication with members of that group.
2. An alphabetical index of those organizations which responded to our questionnaire and the page within the section where their profiles can be found.
3. The "Profiles" themselves: the condensed and formatted responses from each organization.
4. A cross-reference of organizations from other constituency groups which also consider themselves to be part of this group.
5. A mailing list of the organizations which were identified in that constituency group.

HOW TO USE THESE PROFILES

Included in these profiles are every organization that we could discover in the nine constituency groups in each state, a total of nearly 3500. They range from the Portland Urban Indian Council to Rural Alaska Community Action, and from the Spokane YWCA to the Idaho Outdoor Association. As the comments of organizations which responded to our questionnaire reveal, many organizations in Region 10 have little or no direct interest in EPA and its activities. Their interests and those of the EPA simply do not coincide.

Additionally, many of these same organizations have no clear idea of what EPA is and what it does. EPA thus gets the blame or credit for activities of the U.S. Forest Service, the various state departments of ecology, the U.S. Department of Energy, and the federal court system. Thus, in order to improve communication with many organizations, EPA faces a formidable task of educating them to its purposes and to a lesser extent those of other state and federal agencies. While we have suggested in our introductions to several of these constituencies that this may be the best way to improve communication, it remains up to the EPA to determine if such an effort is justified.

As a starting point for communicating with organizations in Region 10, these profiles do several things:

1. They identify who's out there. As we mentioned above, these profiles do not contain every organization in the Region, but they do contain the most important ones and are probably the most comprehensive such listing available. They enable EPA to know who its constituents are. If an even more detailed listing of these constituents proves to be desirable, these lists provide a point from which to begin a more detailed compilation.

2. They are a start at identifying which of these organizations are concerned about the EPA and the environment. Those organizations which responded to our questionnaire are the ones most likely to be interested in public hearings, changes in EPA regulations, or entering into a dialogue on environmental protection. Furthermore, the profiles not only report the main environmental concerns (whether or not they are EPA's responsibility) of each organization and constituency group, they also identify specifically which EPA program areas they are interested in. This gives EPA an idea of who to approach about a specific issue.

3. The profiles, finally, provide a format which can be expanded as more organizations interested in EPA activities are identified. Both at the end of each individual profile, and at the end of each constituency group, room has been left for additional comments and for the inclusion of additional organizations. Thus, these profiles can grow to include the changing and growing list of organizations interested in EPA.

SUMMARY

These profiles were prepared as a tool for EPA to use in communicating with organizations in Region 10. It is our belief that the first step in communicating with another is to understand her/his perceptions and beliefs, to learn to see the world through her/his eyes. These profiles attempt to do this by recording the perceptions of organizations throughout the Region. Many of these viewpoints are critical of EPA and its activities. It is not our intent in preparing these profiles to endorse or validate this criticism -- the views expressed in the profiles of individual organizations are those of the organization profiled and do not necessarily correspond to those of the preparer. Rather we have sought to record these viewpoints accurately so that EPA can know which organizations or constituency groups would like to see it be more active, which less active, and which aren't at all sure what it does. These perceptions can thus inform any efforts EPA may wish to make to improve communication with these organizations.

Further, in our introduction to each of the constituency groups, we have provided whatever background seemed relevant to understanding the concerns and viewpoints of these organizations. Additionally, each concludes with a recommendation about what EPA might do to improve communication with this group. These opinions are our own and do not necessarily reflect EPA thinking or future plans. We do hope, however, that these suggestions and the information contained in these profiles will be useful to EPA in whatever efforts it undertakes to communicate with the organizations which make up its constituency in Region 10.

IDAHO AGRICULTURE

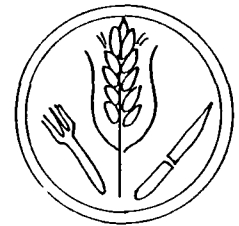

We have identified about 150 agricultural organizations in Idaho. Our list includes the larger irrigation districts, all the soil and water conservation districts, the commodity commissions, production associations, and farmer's organizations. This introduction to the Agriculture Constituency in Idaho will discuss the role of agriculture in the state, the major concerns and environmental interests expressed by agricultural organizations, and their attitudes towards the EPA.

Despite the state's recent push for industrial development, agriculture continues to play a major role in Idaho's economic, social, and political scenes. Its contribution to the economy of the state in 1977 was estimated at $428,412,000. Idaho ranked first in the nation in potato production and second in dry peas. Furthermore, because there is a great amount of loyalty to and identification with rural interests in Idaho, agricultural organizations have an impact on the state well beyond that supported by their numbers.

Farmers in Idaho face many of the same difficulties as do their counterparts in other states. Topping their list of concerns are high interest rates, rising costs of production, and governmental interference. In addition, Idaho farmers are beginning to experience some of the problems associated with urban sprawl and industrial development.

Environmental issues are another major area of concern. Those agriculturalists who responded to our questionnaire displayed a good knowledge of specific environmental issues. For instance, a number of respondents argued articulately against enlarging the "Birds of Prey" area or other wilderness lands, while others advocated multiple use of land presently under federal management. This knowledge clearly results from the fact that many farmers and ranchers will be directly affected by the resolution of these issues.

A number of EPA actions come under fire from agricultural organizations in Idaho. By far the most volatile issue is EPA's regulation of the use of various herbicides and pesticides. Agriculturalists believe that most of these substances have been used in the past without dire consequences and that they are necessary tools for agricultural production. As the Idaho State Grange stated, "(T)he cost of developing substitutes and proving they are both safe and effective is now beyond reason." In addition to this concern about pesticides, many organizations expressed concerns about EPA's dissolved oxygen standards and the Non-Point Pollution Plan.

Besides their objections to specific EPA regulations, most agricultural organizations were generally critical of governmental agencies and the EPA. One aspect of this criticism is an expressed desire for local control: "We think people on the local level or certainly at the state should determine what they want to do about their environment". The EPA was further criticized for being unaware of or unconcerned with local conditions. This was reflected in the belief by many that EPA decisions should contain a better balance between environmental and economic considerations.

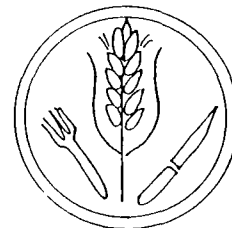

Out of the 36 agricultural organizations that responded to our questionnaire, thirteen had been in contact with EPA. This figure is higher than many of the other constituency groups in the state and reflects the concern of agricultural organizations about EPA activities. Some organizations characterized their dealings with EPA as "open" or "fair", but for the most part these groups were not satisfied with the contact they had with the EPA. A major complaint concerns what they feel to be a lack of responsiveness on the part of the EPA: "(T)he greatest fault of the EPA and other federal agencies is that they do not listen or pay attention." Public hearings were criticized as empty gestures because many believe that the issues being discussed had already been decided by EPA. Another facet of this complaint is the time and red tape involved in dealing with EPA: "(I)t almost took an act of God to get the EPA to respond to our needs in 1976 in Lewiston, Idaho." As one group explained, these delays can be critical in terms of their needs. It is "hard to get quick action which is important because of the growing season and critical timing for application of chemicals".

Agricultural organizations in Idaho are vitally concerned about environmental issues in general and the EPA in particular because of the impact those issues and EPA rulings have on their activities. This concern has translated itself into a fairly specific knowledge of EPA and its activities on environmental issues. However, this knowledge is coupled with a real belief that EPA is either unaware of, or not interested in, the particular needs and problems of agriculture. Thus EPA's challenge in improving communication with agricultural organizations is not the simple transmission of information but rather establishing a two-way communication process where agricultural needs are taken into account in the formulation of rulings and regulations that affect them.

Name of Organization	FOOD PRODUCERS OF IDAHO, INC.
Address	P.O. Box 5755 Boise, Idaho 83705 (208) 336-1221
Contact Person	Gordon Tate, President Tom Hovenden, Secretary
Communication Tools	"The Horn of Plenty" (newsletter)
Organizational Information	This is a statewide organization of 25 "farm and commodity" organizational members and about 100 individual farmers. It acts on issues facing agriculture (farm labor, environmental issues) when all members agree.
Environmental Concerns	The organization supports "reasonable environmental programs that are beneficial, but also economically attainable". It has taken positions on oxygen levels below dams, opposing birds of prey expansion, supporting the Sagebrush Rebellion, and has been active in the State 208 Program. It disagrees with EPA's restrictions on 2,4,5-T.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Water Quality, Toxic Substances, Solid Waste, Pesticides and Drinking Water.

Address	P.O. Box 5755 Boise, Idaho 83705 (208) 343-1615
Contact Person	Gary Chipman, President Tom Hovenden, Secretary-Manager
Communication Tools	"Idahobeef" (newsletter); mailings of bulletins and special letters
Organizational Information	This is a statewide organization comprised of cattle feeders and interested cattle producers who feed 90% of the feed cattle in Idaho. There are also 75 organizations in allied industries who are associated members. The Association's focus is on "first, the best interests of the cattle feeding industry in Idaho; second, the best interests of the cattle industry in Idaho and the United States".
Environmental Concerns	The Association has "deep concerns" about the environment and the charges that its industry causes pollution. It stands "ready to abide by what has been proven by proper scientific investigation". The Association has been concerned about making Indian Creek "a prime fishery at a horrible cost" and about demands upon water quality at the American Falls Dam outlet. It agrees with EPA's "final wording of the discharge permit requirements for feedlot(s)" and disagrees with EPA's restriction of certain weed sprays.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Water Quality, Solid Waste, Drinking Water, Toxic Substances and Pesticides.

Contact Person	Mike Mogensen, Executive Vice-President Howard Raney, President T.F. Pence, Environmental Officer
Communication Tools	"The Line Rider" (monthly newsletter); through the news media
Organizational Information	This is a statewide organization of about 2000 cattlemen working on issues related to the cattle industry.
Environmental Concerns	The Association is concerned that "cattlemen as well as other industries must be permitted to make wise multiple use of our renewable and fixed actual resources, yet practice measures of conservation and reasonable environmental protection". The Association has taken positions: 1) opposing further wilderness designation; 2) opposing air quality standards for agricultural and wilderness areas; 3) supporting the use of "safe" agricultural chemicals, additives, and medicine; 4) opposing the "Andrus Predator Policies"; 5) opposing further expansion of the Birds of Prey Area. They have not agreed with any EPA actions and have disagreed with EPA's air quality standards on aerial spraying, buffer zones around spray areas, oxygen levels below American Falls Dam, efforts to discontinue DDT and 2,4,5-T, and regulations on non-point sewer pollution.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Radiation, Water Quality, Toxic Substances, and Pesticides.

Organizational Information	This is a statewide organization of about 22,500 family members. It is divided into 38 county bureaus that promote "the educational, economic and social well being of Farm Bureau members".
Environmental Concerns	The Federation's primary environmental concerns are the wise use of "natural resources and the productive capability of private enterprise within adequate environmental safeguards". They oppose further expansion of wilderness areas, support the expansion of nuclear energy and the continued use of 2,3,5-T and other pesticides. They want more scientific evidence that the risks from using pesticides far outweigh the benefits and disagree with EPA actions restricting the use of pesticides.

Organizational
Information

The Grange is a statewide organization of about 11,000 members with branch offices located in every county.

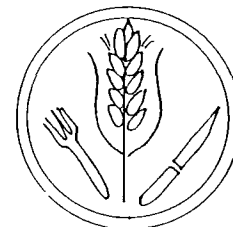

Environmental
Concerns

The Grange's environmental priorities are "a good environment for people to live in - but recognize that above all, people do have to live here". It has taken positions favoring the relaxation of some environmental controls and regulations such as fewer emission controls on light trucks, a lower level of dissolved oxygen in water below dams, and permitting the use of 2,4,5-T where needed on forest land. They could not list EPA actions with which they agreed, but they disagreed with EPA's banning of 2,4,5-T, its emission controls that cut gas mileage, the use of exhaust converters which cause fire danger, and the complete banning of DDT.

Organizational
Information

This is one of the soil and water conservation districts in Idaho. Its prime purpose is to "prepare a conservation program for the district and with help of facilitating agencies and volunteers (particularly landowners), work to achieve the objectives of the program". The District has cooperating agreements with 600 landowners and operators.

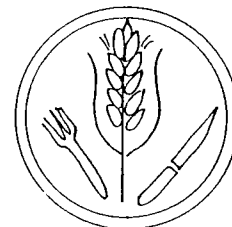

Environmental
Concerns

The District's environmental concerns are maintaining crop, range, and forest land in a productive state, preserving water quality, controlling wind erosion, and planting trees for beauty, screening and oxygenation. The District has taken environmental positions by participating in Idaho's water quality management plan, by supporting tree planting programs, and by protecting over-reaction on wilderness proposals. The District agrees with EPA's willingness to cooperate with local groups, establishing cooperative agreement arrangements with soil conservation districts, and its recognition of the need for voluntary action to protect the environment. The District disagreed with EPA for taking an "over-cautious" view on the use of agricultural chemicals, spending money and effort unproductively by stopping needed energy and water use projects and trying to help make things too safe for people.

Name of Organization	MUD LAKE SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION DISTRICT
Address	Terreton, Idaho 83450 (208) 663-4463
Contact Person	Lloyd Barzee, Chairman
Communication Tools	Annual Report; public meetings; news releases
Organizational Information	This is a local district composed of "280 farm units, 10 groups, 13 state and local units of governments, and about 35 non-farm land units". Its purpose is to promote and organize voluntary conservation programs.
Environmental Concerns	The District's environmental priorities are "maintaining land in a productive state; adequate supplies of irrigation water efficiently used; weed control; drainage". It has taken positions opposing the expansion of wilderness areas, the removal of area ground water for use elsewhere, and the over-expansion of irrigation developments. It agreed with EPA's "participation with local soil conservation districts in non-point pollution control". It disagrees with EPA's actions on predator control and its control of chemicals which could have controlled Spruce bud worms and pine bark beetles. The District believes that conservation "is the wise use and management of resources. It is directly tied to environmental quality". It favors a "balanced approach" ..."environmental concern needs to pass economic tests", and opposes, for instance, locking up forests while people need wood for houses.

Organizational Information	This District has about 350 cooperators, and its primary concern is the conservation of the soils and agricultural lands.
Environmental Concerns	The District's environmental priorities are the preservation of water quality and the protection of regional resources. It has taken positions supporting Idaho's 208 water quality project and agreed with EPA's actions making money available to conservation districts to hire technicians, on point source pollution, and on mandatory EIS's. It has disagreed with EPA's "by-passing state policies with grant monies which involve local cooperators".

Communication Tools	District Annual Report; press releases
Organizational Information	The District has about 350 "cooperators" in the county and focuses on soil and water conservation.
Environmental Concerns	The District's environmental concerns are "conservation of natural resources, stopping soil erosion and improving water quality as it relates to agricultural production". The District took a position opposing enlargement of "Birds of Prey" area but could not comment on EPA actions it agreed with because "the district has virtually no information about the EPA actions other than TV news or newspaper articles on all the negative actions taken". The District disagrees with EPA's "banning of certain pesticides" that are "vital to the agricultural industry".

Communication Tools	"R.N. Irving Chapter Newsletter"
Organizational Information	This organization is active statewide with a membership of about 100 professionals and laymen involved in soil and water conservation. Their primary focus is to advance the science and art of good land use and to resolve land and water conservation problems. A neighbor branch of SCSA is the Inland Empire Chapter, c/o Jud Melton, N. 222 Havana, Spokane, WA 99206.
Environmental Concerns	They are concerned with environmental quality, growing demand for food and fiber, conversion of agricultural land to non-agricultural uses, new approaches to conservation programs, non-point source water pollution, and environmental education. They do take official positions at the Chapter level. One of the more important taken recently concerns the Snake River Birds of Prey Area. They believe it should be expanded, but Land Capability Units Class I and II with 140 days of frost free season should be excluded. They have agreed with EPA positions concerning: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) critical area water quality planning funds (208) 2) SCDs being names local management agencies (208) 3) land treatment as solution to solving non-point source pollution. They have disagreed with EPA actions concerning: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) work outlines required as basis for providing water quality funding 2) lack of coordination and communication with other agencies involved when developing water quality objectives.

BUSINESS

IDAHO BUSINESS

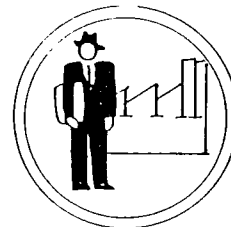

We have identified approximately 70 business organizations in Idaho. These are associations of businesses in a given field, such as the Idaho Association of Realtors or the Oil Heat Institute, rather than individual businesses. We've included all of the associations which we could identify in the state, as well as the major Chambers of Commerce. What follows is an introduction to the Business Constituency in Idaho. It provides a general overview of the major industries in the state, their concerns, and their environmental interests.

Although agriculture continues to be the single strongest influence in Idaho's economy, a number of other businesses are making increasingly significant contributions. Chief among these are timber, mining, and manufacturing enterprises. Manufacturing especially has increased in recent years growing from an annual product of $661,000,000 in 1973 to one of $830,000,000 in 1977 (in constant dollars). This reflects the fact that many industries are being encouraged to locate in the state and that industrial development is seen by many as a key to the state's future.

Representatives of various business organizations speak dismally, however, of their present economic situation. The problems they cite, -- high interest rates, high taxes, and dwindling energy resources -- are not unique to Idaho, but that fact does little to encourage them. The construction industry, and consequently the lumber industry, has been the hardest hit and this, in turn, has affected the growth of other industries in the state.

The general consensus is that these economic considerations have overshadowed environmental concerns. Furthermore, business representatives don't seem to be as concerned about environmental regulations per se, as they are about federal regulations in general -- which they see as restricting their ability to conduct businesses already struggling with the above cited problems.

Our questionnaires provide a more detailed view of this picture. The sixteen business organizations that responded generally agreed that there is some need to protect the environment. Their most frequently mentioned concerns were the need to protect air and water quality, to conserve and develop energy resources, and to balance economic growth with environmental protection. However, they did object strenuously to EPA as a regulatory body. Some, like the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, object to regulations in total: "We are really against all the federal regulations and controls under which business/industry has too work". Others object to the sheer number of regulations while some feel that environmental regulations do not reflect the interests of all sectors of the population. The National Highway Users Federation suggests that EPA "(G)et business/industry and citizens from this segment of society more involved on at least a 50/50 ratio to discuss all facets of the issues". There was also criticism regarding the applicability of national standards to local areas. This criticism was twofold: 1) the environmental regulations appropriate to cities in the East are inappropriate for Idaho's rural areas; 2) local officials and business people are ill equipped to deal with the complexities of these regulations.

Given these objectives to EPA, suggestions for improving communications with business organizations are difficult to make. If EPA is simply interested in circulating information about its activities, that might best be done through the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry. It has over 500 corporate members including Chambers of Commerce, the utilities, all the large companies in the state, and many of the smaller ones. Other key organizations are the Idaho Mining Association, the Idaho Forest Industry Council, and the Associated Taxpayers of Idaho.

However, some business representatives expressed strong resistance to receiving governmental newsletters. In their minds, these types of communication serve only to perpetuate the existence of the Agency. They favored the development of some type of dialogue in which they could express their ideas and have them taken into consideration as environmental regulations were developed. A real improvement in communication with businesses may well rest on the development of dialogue of this kind.

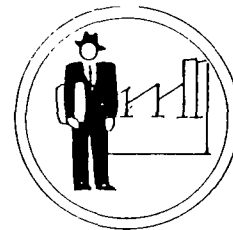

What follows is an alphabetical index of those business organizations which responded to our questionnaire. This list is in turn followed by the profiles which detail the specific responses of individual organizations.

Environmental
Concerns

"We are concerned with the rationale of various regulations being proposed. Questions we seek answers to are: 1) Is the regulation reasonable? 2) Economic impact? 3) How well is the general public informed concerning environmental issues? 4) Are environmental changes made as a result of pressure from a few, or are changes made for the sake of change?" The Chamber has taken positions on the following: Non-attainment status of the greater Pocatello area; agencies developing economic impact for all new regulations proposed, and opposing regulations that declare ammonia as a hazardous chemical. They agree with EPA actions to promulgate regulations for all of U.S. for air and water. They disagree with the following: 1) measurements of particulate in a dry climate such as Idaho where background dust is higher than standard; 2) measurements of SO₂ in ambient air requires hourly reporting rather than on a 24-hour average; 3) standards for various areas should reflect that particular area rather than having the same regulation for a highly industrialized region such as the East.

Organizational
Information

This is a business organization with a membership of 45 consulting engineering firms practicing in Idaho whose purpose is to protect the public interest and advance the professional quality of consulting engineers and land surveyors in private practice in Idaho.

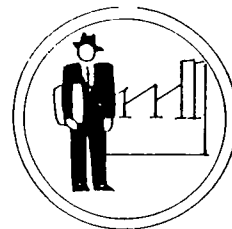

Environmental
Concerns

Their environmental concerns include the development of adequate systems for wastewater collection and treatment, solid wastes, hazardous wastes and air pollution control for Idaho communities and industry, and implementation of the safe drinking water act. One recent environmental position taken included presentation of testimony at EPA hearings on MBE. CEI encourages development of more flexible goals taking into account the number of minority firms and persons in the state rather than the region. They have agreed with EPA proposals to reduce paperwork for small towns and also state review of environmental plans. They disagree with EPA on the following: 1) MBE goals are too inflexible for Idaho situation, 2) the Corps of Engineers involvement in constructibility reviews and inspection of small projects, 3) voluminous regulations.

Organizational
Information

This is a business organization having 500 small businesses as members (70-80% having under 10 employees) whose purpose is "to maintain a reasonable business climate" and "protect free enterprise" in the state.

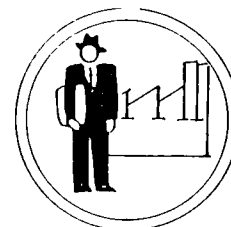

Environmental
Concerns

Their environmental priority is to maintain environmental quality in the state of Idaho, and they have worked with the state legislature to write understandable rules and regulations for air and water standards. They disagreed with the EPA "rejection of State Water Quality regulations concerning dissolved dioxide and ammonia", and object to federal agencies being able to override state legislation. They see EPA as being "only involved in negative actions anyway, so usually not favorable."

ENVIRONMENT

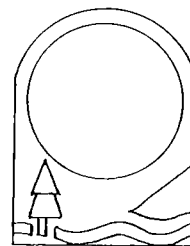

IDAHO ENVIRONMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

We have identified approximately 175 environmental organizations in Idaho. In addition to the traditional environmental groups such as the Sierra Club and the Idaho Conservation League, we have included many outdoor and sporting organizations, which have often played an active role in efforts to preserve wilderness areas as game habitat or protect water quality for fishing. This introduction to the Environmental Constituency Group in Idaho will briefly describe the diversity of environmental organizations, their primary concerns, and their attitudes toward the EPA.

The Idaho Conservation League is the largest group in the state, representing a broad spectrum of environmental concerns and serving as the umbrella organization for most of the environmental groups in Idaho. Another statewide organization which has a wide impact, even though it operates without staff, is the Idaho Environmental Council. As is true in other areas of the country, a number of smaller environmental groups have developed with more specialized concerns, such as the River of No Return Wilderness Council or the Clearwater Conservation Forum. These smaller groups generally focus on one issue or on the environment of a particular area. Unlike other states, where this specialization has sometimes led to factionalizing or infighting, there appears to be good cooperation among the various environmental interests in Idaho.

Environmental groups in Idaho are concerned with a wide variety of issues. Air and water quality, conservation of natural resources, and land management were some areas of interest most frequently mentioned on our questionnaire responses. Additionally, preservation of wildlife areas in Idaho has captured the attention of a number of different groups and has received widespread support.

Many of these groups are familiar with EPA actions and were quick to point out areas of agreement or disagreement. In general, they supported EPA's environmental protection efforts and disagreed only when EPA seemed to lower its standards or was slow in its efforts. For instance, they supported EPA refusals to allow variation in air quality standards in some areas and opposed those exceptions that EPA did grant. Similarly, a number of groups supported EPA suspending use of certain pesticides and objected to allowing the use of 2,4,5-T for rice, fruit, or rangeland activities. Furthermore, unlike the agriculture and business/industry constituency groups, environmentalists were supportive of the fact that EPA regulations supercede state ones and they expressed concern when EPA gave up control to state agencies.

However, inspite of this general agreement with EPA and its activities, there exists a substantial number of organizations which are not familiar with EPA actions. For instance, only five of the twenty-five organizations which responded to our questionnaire have been in contact with the EPA (this compared with over 33% of both the agricultural and business/industry respondents). This is especially true among the sporting or outdoor organizations. For instance, the Bonneville County Sportsmen's Association, though concerned about waste quality, replied that it didn't "interact with EPA on any issues" that it was aware of.

For EPA to improve communications with environmental organizations in Idaho, it will have to reach out to these sporting and outdoor organizations which are now largely unaware of its activities. That might best be done through direct mailings to these organizations or through the Idaho Wildlife Federation which is the activist group for many of them. The Idaho Conservation League and the Idaho Environmental Council are both good organizations through which to reach many of the environmental groups in the state. In addition, there is The Idaho Citizen, a monthly newspaper put out by Kenneth L. Robinson, a state senator from Boise. It is dedicated to environmental issues in the broadest sense and probably reaches more environmentalists than any other publication.

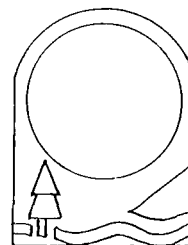

What follows is an alphabetical index of the organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It in turn is followed by the profiles which contain their specific responses.

Organizational
Information

The focus of this organization is to "promote rational natural resource decision-making in north central Idaho." Membership varies on an issues-by-issues basis.

Environmental
Concerns

The main environmental concerns of this group are:

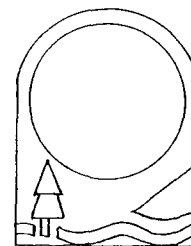

- Lewiston air quality
- River water quality, especially the Clearwater
- Land use planning.

They have taken official positions in support of State of Idaho air quality permit for Potlatch Corp.; opposing opening navigation up the Clearwater river; in support of River of No Return, and in support of land use plans. They have agreed with EPA actions in regard to suspension of 2,4,5-T use; opposing State of Idaho water quality plan; and justifying economics of air quality control. They have disagreed with EPA action in regard to: not suspending use of 2,4,5-T on fruit, rice, and rangelands and giving up of pesticide control to state agricultural agencies.

LABOR

IDAHO LABOR

We have identified approximately 50 labor unions in the state of Idaho. This is not meant to be an exhaustive list of all labor organizations in the state but rather a collection of the largest and most important ones. This introduction to the Labor Constituency in Idaho will briefly describe the extent of union activity in the state, the primary problems facing unions, and their environmental concerns.

Idaho's labor force is not highly unionized. Only about 15% of the 432,000 workers in the state belong to unions while the national average is about 24%. Despite the relatively small percentage of unionized labor in the state, its influence is important in some areas where unionization is almost total -- as in the mining districts, large lumber mills, railroads, and airlines. Northern and southeastern Idaho are the most heavily unionized areas, although union activity is present in most areas of the state.

Unions in Idaho have frequently faced challenges in the legislature. Presently there is a right to work bill that will be submitted to the next legislature which would hamper their ability to organize and to retain members. There are also threats to repeal fair wage laws favored by the unions. While union representatives are optimistic about their chances to deal with these and other issues, they feel that these recurring battles prevent them from taking more positive action within the state. Consequently, while labor unions consider environmental matters to be one of their top ten concerns, their efforts have been primarily focused on other issues that more directly affect their survival.

This attitude was evident in the responses that we received to our questionnaires. Labor had the lowest response rate of any of the Idaho constituency groups (only 7 out of 52), and none of those who did respond had any previous contact with the EPA. Of the environmental concerns that were mentioned in their responses, maintaining air quality standards, limitations to the size of wilderness areas, and preserving water quality received the most support.

One attitude that did surface in the responses was the need for a balance between environmental protection and economic development. Underlying this concern seemed to be the assumption that stronger environmental controls will adversely affect the labor market.

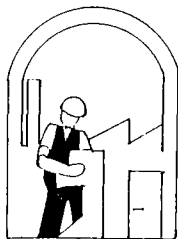

Labor

As expressed by the Rocky Mountain District Council of Carpenters, unions support a "common sense balance between Air, Water, Waste, and Radiation Qualities and WORK for our membership. We naturally desire a decent place in which to live, BUT we have to make a living in order to support our families." On the other hand, one union representative stated that "(S)ometimes I think it's [environmental protection activities are] overdone until I look at my grandchildren and worry." Thus, while labor unions seem to have an awareness of the need for environmental protection that awareness is strongly tempered by concern about their employment situation.

The prime obstacles EPA confronts in reaching Idaho unions are their preoccupation with other issues and, to a lesser extent, their fear that environmental protection may mean fewer jobs. Perhaps the most important first step in improving communication would be providing unions with information on environmental issues relevant to their particular areas of employment. This could best be done either through the AFL-CIO State Labor Council or through state trade councils.

What follows is an alphabetical list of the labor unions in Idaho that responded to our questionnaire. This list is in turn followed by the profiles which contain the information from individual responses.

Organizational Information	This is a local union representing 246 telephone workers. Other Idaho Locals are: Local 8103, Nampa/Caldwell; Local 8130, Boise; Local 8110, Idaho Falls; Local 8114, Twin Falls.
Environmental Concerns	"Clean air to breathe and radiation-free water to drink and fish in" are the environmental priorities of this union. The national union does take positions on environmental issues but individual Locals do not. They agree with EPA action to protect air quality at FMC and Simplots and feel it was long overdue. It supports water and oxygen protection for fish at American Falls Power Plant. However, it disagrees with the EPA ruling to protect the Snail Darter at the cost of dam construction.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Radiation, Water Quality, Noise, Drinking Water, Toxic Substances, and Pesticides.

MINORITIES

IDAHO MINORITIES

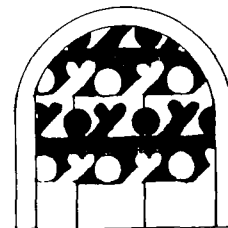

We have identified 20 minority organizations which represent the Hispanic, Black, Asian American, and Native American populations in the State of Idaho. This introduction to the Minority Constituency in Idaho will look at the make-up of this population, their environmental concerns, and how they can best be reached.

Idaho has a small minority population. The 1970 census estimated it to be less than 5% of the state's total population of 915,000. Although representatives of some minority groups question the accuracy of the census figures, Idaho does have a small percentage of minorities when compared to other states.

We have included in our list of Idaho minority organizations those representing Asian Americans and Blacks as well as Native Americans and Hispanics. However, it is these two later groups which are the most visible and best organized minority groups in the state. Hispanics are by far the largest group in the state, numbering close to 45,000. The Idaho Migrant Council is their principle organization, and it has branches throughout the state. There are about 8,000 Native Americans in Idaho who live primarily on reservations where they are represented by five tribal councils (the Coeur d'Alene, Shoshone-Bannock, Kootenai, Nez Perce, and Shoshone-Paiute).

These minority organizations are primarily concerned with providing services and opportunities for their people. In their responses to our questionnaires and in follow-up interviews, representatives of minority groups recognized the integral relationship between environmental quality and quality of life, but they differed on whether the environment is presently a priority in light of the importance of more immediate concerns facing their members. Most of them have not had contact with the EPA and are unaware of specific EPA actions. A vocal exception to this was a representative of the NEZ Perce Tribal Council who was extremely positive about the EPA and the importance of their role. Perhaps a more representative position was taken by the Idaho Migrant Council, which acknowledged that they would eventually have to deal with environmental problems and work with the EPA.

Neither Blacks nor Asian American organizations are very active in the state nor very concerned about environmental issues. As an example, the Japanese American Citizens League noted that they "have no organizational interest in environmental matters."

Minorities

Presently there is not much communication or coordination among the different ethnic groups. Given limited resources, EPA efforts could perhaps most productively be directed towards improving contact with larger organizations, such as the Idaho Migrant Council and the Intertribal Tribal Councils.

What follows is an alphabetical list of the minority organizations which responded to our questionnaire. This is in turn followed by profiles of the individual organizations which contain their particular environmental concerns.

PUBLIC INTEREST

IDAHO PUBLIC INTEREST

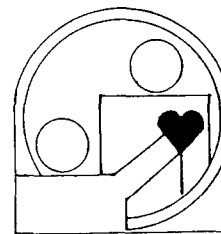

We have identified 130 Public Interest organizations in Idaho. We have taken the term "public interest" literally in defining this constituency group and have included on our list those organizations whose activities seem to be intended to benefit the community at large. This introduction to the Public Interest Constituency Group in Idaho will look at the diversity of this group, its environmental concerns, and the difficulties involved in communicating with its members.

There are a wide variety of organizations included in this group. It ranges from traditional organizations such as the Jaycees and the Lions Club to relative newcomers such as Legal Aid Service, Planned Parenthood, and the Consumer League. Some, such as the Idaho Hunger Action Council, focus primarily on one area of concern, while others -- like the Gray Panthers -- are primarily interested in one segment of the community.

While generalizations are difficult to make about such diverse organizations, it seems that, for most of these groups, environmental concerns are tangential to their main concerns. This is reflected in the fact that those organizations which responded to our questionnaire stated their environmental concerns in general terms, such as "clean air" or "clean water", and did not display much knowledge about specific environmental issues. Similarly, few of the organizations had much information on EPA actions. Of the 21 who responded to our questionnaire, only 4 had any previous contact with the EPA.

One obstacle that seems to account for the lack of involvement by these public interest organizations in environmental concerns is the fact that most of them are basically voluntary. Any money, staff, or time they have is directed towards their area of primary concern. Another reason given by many of them for their lack of involvement with EPA is that, as voluntary organizations, they lack the expertise to ask for help from governmental agencies. These groups are not familiar with grant-writing or "playing the bureaucratic game" and really don't know how to go about reaching out to the EPA.

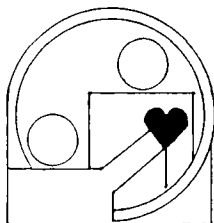

Developing good communication with public interest groups will be a challenge. There is a lack of information on these groups as a constituency; there appears to be little or no inter-organizational communication among them; and there is no unifying voice which expresses their concerns. Additionally, many of these organizations would only be interested in issues that relate directly to their specific areas of concern and would not have the time or energy to wade through large amounts of material to find relevant information. Given the difficulty in communicating with this constituency group as a whole, EPA might best spend its efforts reaching those individual organizations which are clearly interested in involving themselves in environmental issues.

Public Interest

What follows is an alphabetical list of those public interest organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It is followed by the profiles which contain the responses of these organizations.

Organizational
Information

This group does not have a formal membership but serves about 6500 senior citizens. The focus of their group is to provide services to older residents of the area.

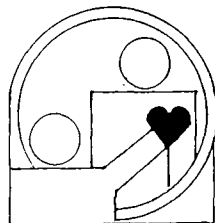

Environmental
Concerns

"We are here to create a comfortable environment for creative aging. Environmental education in its broadest sense is incorporated in our day to day operation of the Senior center, staff training, etc." Official positions on issues are not taken by the agency, although many members are directly involved in issues. They do provide an open forum for information, presentations, and discussions.

Organizational
Information

This organization provides legal representation and community legal education to low income persons in Idaho. It is not a membership organization but serves clients who are below 150% of the official U.S. government poverty level. See also the responses from the Pocatello, Coeur d'Alene, and the Administrative Offices. Other area offices are listed with information on the Administrative Office.

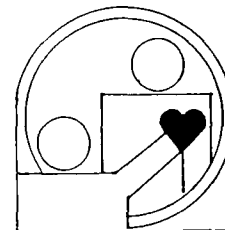

Environmental
Concerns

This office is concerned with utility law, air and water pollution, pesticides, and toxic substances as their clients are affected. ILAS has taken official positions on the National Energy Conservation Policy Act, Residential Conservation Service Program, and the Low Income Energy Assistance Program. They have agreed with EPA action in regard to five non-compliance areas in Idaho (Kellog, Lewiston, Boise, Pocatello, and Idaho Falls) but feel that stronger enforcement is needed to stop pollution there. They have disagreed with EPA actions concerning granting a higher quality standard for the Pocatello (Simplot, FMC) area.

URBAN

IDAHO URBAN ORGANIZATIONS

We have identified 18 urban organizations in the state of Idaho. Included are those neighborhood associations that exist in Boise, Community Action Agencies and Economic Development Agencies throughout the state, and both the Idaho Association of Cities and Counties. This introduction to the Urban Constituency Group in Idaho will look at its size, the concerns of its members, and their environmental interests.

There are few urban organizations in Idaho due to the fact that the state is primarily rural. Even though the 1970 census indicated that 66.4% of Idaho's population live in urban areas, these "urban" areas would be considered rural when compared with major cities in other states. Without major urban areas, the development of neighborhood organizations has generally not occurred. Boise as the only urban area in the state with a population of over 100,000 is the exception to this situation. Pocatello with a population of 44,100 is the next largest population center.

Those urban organizations that do exist voice some common concerns. The lack of local revenue and the delay involved in obtaining Federal funds were the most frequently mentioned obstacles to their aim of community improvement. Environmental issues were also cited by many as a high priority. Air and water quality, solid waste disposal, and general support for maintaining a quality environment were the most frequently mentioned environmental concerns.

Overall these groups seemed to have an awareness of specific environmental issues. Controversies over the application of air and water quality standards to specific communities were discussed knowledgeably. A major point of disagreement with EPA revolved around the issues of local control. For instance, several groups objected to the application of national air and water quality procedures and standards to local problems.

Few of the groups which responded to our questionnaire have had previous contact with the EPA. Of those which did have contact, it was not always positive. The major complaint was that the EPA was "not interested" or "vague". A strongly voiced criticism was a perceived lack of enforcement by EPA -- which was described as a "paper tiger" -- for not carrying out threats to withhold federal funds for noncompliance with its environmental regulations.

Urban

Given the small size of this constituency group, its members can perhaps best be contacted directly. This could be done most appropriately on the basis of geography rather than topic. These organizations are likely to be interested in any issue that will affect their own community, but may have little interest in issues that will impact other communities.

What follows is an alphabetical index of those organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It in turn is followed by the profiles of these organizations.

Contact Person	Martin L. Peterson, Director
Communication Tools	"Idaho Cities" and "City Report" (newsletter) Numerous workbooks; Technical bulletins.
Organizational Information	The organization is composed of "local officials working at the state level" to provide "services and technical assistance" to 174 cities.
Environmental Concerns	The Association's environmental priorities are an awareness of state and federal laws, regulations and programs with respect to the environment. It has supported amendments to the Idaho Water Pollution Control Act and supported vehicle commission legislation. It disagrees with EPA for its handling of the Boise City Parking Garage question.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Water Quality, and Drinking Water.

Contact Person	John Kopcznski, President Dan Green, Executive Director Craig Wood, Environmental Officer
Communication Tools	"CEDA Newsletter" press releases
Organizational Information	This organization provides services to local government in grantsmanship, planning and technical assistance. Membership is composed of Clearwater, Idaho, Latah, Lewis, and Nez Perce counties and the cities that fall within those counties.
Environmental Concerns	The Association's environmental priorities include: 1) coordination of planning and regulatory programs with local governmental goals and objectives; 2) development of capacity at the local level for regulation of air, water and solid waste management. It has taken the following positions on environmental issues: 1) Strongly supported development of an alcohol fuels industry in the region; 2) endorsed efforts of small firewood users to improve their access to firewood on public lands; 3) expressed concern about lack of public hearing on RARE II. They support EPA's funding of 208 Study in the LOID watershed. EPA actions they disagree with are: 1) Lack of enforcement action on NPDES permit violation by Albert Engels in Pierce; 2) over emphasis on big city sewer problems in 201 priority list; 3) lack of coordination of 201 program with other state and federal grants programs.

EPA Program Areas of Interest Solid Waste, Water Quality, and Drinking Water.

Organizational
Information

The Agency works in nine counties focusing on community development (both urban and rural), housing, water/sewer, migrant claims, and people's rights.

Environmental
Concerns

Its primary environmental concerns are about water/waste water, toxic substances, radiation and labor. It has advocated clean drinking water and reduction of solid waste disposal in inappropriate areas. The Agency has disagreed with EPA's major emphasis toward waste water disposal as opposed to clean water and feels that there are smaller communities in the area unable to finance much-needed water improvements necessary to alleviate health and safety hazards.

Communication Tools	"The Citizens Energy Bulletin" (newsletter)
Organizational Information	The focus of the organization is to protect the interests of citizens at Public Utility Commission rate hearings and on energy-related issues. It is governed by a Board of mostly low income members and operates statewide.
Environmental Concerns	The Coalition is concerned about a clean environment, air and water quality, and all energy-related issues. Its members have taken a position of pushing for solar energy, lower energy and utility rates and against coal-powered plants. They have agreed with EPA's disapproval of state water quality standards and hope that EPA will not approve requests for variances from air quality regulations for the downtown Boise parking garage.

WOMEN

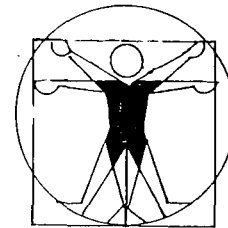

IDAHO WOMEN

Women in Idaho constitute 51% of the state's population. Approximately 49% of the 461,326 women in Idaho are working and compose 39% of the total labor force. We have identified 45 organizations in the state whose membership is composed primarily of women or which focus primarily on women's issues or concerns. This introduction to the Women's Constituency Group in Idaho looks at the diversity of women's organizations, their environmental concerns, and the difficulty of communicating with this group.

It is difficult to generalize about women's organizations in Idaho. They have a wide variety of concerns and purposes and range from social groups to professional organizations and from women's rights to home economics. This difficulty is compounded by the fact that there is no unifying voice for women's interests in the state, and no organization is generally recognized as speaking for all the groups. The Idaho Commission on Women's Program³ was originally envisioned to serve this function when it was established 15 years ago. However, it has received considerable criticism for not representing the interests of conservative women. This is a significant charge in light of the fact that Idaho, more than many states, has a strong conservative reaction to the women's rights movement. The Commission now faces probable dissolution. However, even if it continues, it does not represent professional organizations, social groups, or community service providers.

The environmental concerns and awarenesses of this constituency group are similarly hard to generalize. Some organizations, such as the League of Women Voters, have a clear understanding of many environmental issues and EPA's role in them. Others, like the Boise Syringa Chapter of the American Business Women's Association, though interested in environmental matters, have little knowledge about them. Finally, there are those groups which are simply not interested in the environment.

Given this diversity, EPA is faced with a difficult problem in trying to reach this constituency. With the dissolution of the Idaho Commission on Women's Programs, there is no central organization capable of reaching even that portion of women's groups concerned with women's rights. Unless EPA has the time and energy to contact each organization separately, its efforts may best be spent in communication with those groups that have expressed a direct interest in environmental issues.

IDAHO YOUTH

We have identified 20 Youth Organizations in Idaho. This introduction to the Youth Constituency will look at these youth organizations, the problems involved in communicating with young people, and what their environmental concerns seem to be.

Traditional youth organizations such as the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, 4-H Clubs, YMCA, and YWCA are the major youth organizations in the state. However, there is no central organization that speaks for all of them or which can provide information on young people's attitudes in the state. There are plans for a Youth Council, but this will deal primarily with young people having trouble in the justice system and will not be representative of all youth. Due to this lack of information, it is difficult to generalize about the concerns or opinions of Idaho's young people.

The information that we do have comes from the adult leaders who responded to our questionnaires and telephone interviews. They express a general interest in conservation and the environment and indicate that their organizations are involved in programs such as "Keep Idaho Green" and "Woodsy Owl". In fact, environmental awareness and appreciation, although going by a variety of names, has been part of most of these youth organizations since their inception. While it is difficult to directly assess the attitudes of young people towards the environment, the high level of participation in these organizations could indicate a basic concern about environmental matters.

Those organizations which did respond to our questionnaires had no specific knowledge of the EPA or its activities. Indeed, they expressed their environmental concerns in general terms, such as wanting clean air and water and hoping to teach an appreciation for nature. Furthermore, they did not see it as part of their role to take positions on environmental issues.

At present, there is no organizational knowledge about EPA and its activities among these youth organizations. Thus, EPA's first task in communicating with them will be to create a basic understanding of its role and activities. Given the historical interest of these organizations in the environment and their present efforts to teach an appreciation of the natural world, many of these groups will be receptive to any communication efforts.
