OWNER'S MANUAL

These Constituency Profiles have been prepared for the Office of Public Awareness of the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) by the Northwest Regional Foundation of Spokane, Washington as an aide in communicating with the various organizations in Region 10 which are affected by EPA activities. The views expressed herein, except those attributed to individual organizations, are those of the preparer and do not necessarily correspond to those of the EPA. This Owner's Manual is intended to be a guide for users of these profiles. It will explain how the profiles were compiled, how they are organized, and how they might be used.

HOW THEY WERE COMPILED

EPA requested that we develop profiles of organizations in nine constituency areas. These areas are Agriculture, Business and Industry, Environment, Labor, Minorities, Public Interest, Urban, Women, and Youth. Our first step in preparing these profiles was to compile a list of the organizations in each constituency group in Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, the four states which comprise Region 10. In some cases, this was a fairly easy task. For instance, the State Department of Agriculture in Washington had a very complete list of the agricultural organizations in the state. This was generally true in each of the states for Agriculture, Business and Industry, Labor, and Environment. However, to the best of our knowledge, ours was the first attempt to assemble comprehensive lists of Minority, Urban, Women, and Youth organizations in each of the states. There has been no previous effort to compile any sort of list of Public Interest groups in the Region.

As a result, there are probably gaps in some of the lists. For instance, in Washington, we obtained lists of women's organizations from the Women's Resource Center in Spokane, the Seattle Office of Women's Rights, and the U.S. Department of Labor in its Directory for Reaching Minority and Women's Groups. Although we were told by several women's organizations that these were the most complete lists available, it seems to us that they can not contain all the Women's groups in the state. However, while we have inevitably missed some organizations in each of the constituency groups, this effort provides a starting point for any further expansion of the lists.

Once we had these lists in hand, we developed a questionnaire to be mailed to all the organizations that we had identified in each of the states. It requested basic information about each organization, such as phone number, contact person, number of members, main focus, and how it communicates with its members. Additionally, the questionnaire asked for information about the organization's environmental concerns. We also asked for their environmental priorities, any issues on which they had taken positions, a statement of EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed, and which, if any, of EPA program areas they would like to receive information about. A copy of the questionnaire is attached.

We mailed out a total of 3400 questionnaires: 470 in Alaska, 680 in Idaho, 975 in Oregon, and 1270 in Washington. A follow-up letter to all groups and phone calls to key organizations brought in 548 responses for a total response rate of 15.9%. This breaks down to 63 or 12.1% from Alaska, 139 or 20.1% from Idaho, 145 or 15.0% from Oregon, and 201 or 15.9% from Washington.

Once we had all the responses, we began to list them in the standard format of the individual profiles. This includes the name of the organization, its address and contact person, how it communicates with its members, organizational information, environmental priorities, and those EPA program areas about which it would like to be informed. We have also left space on the profiles for additional comments after "Further Contacts". In some cases, we summarized responses to make them easier to read, but in all cases, we maintained the original content and often quoted from the questionnaire directly.

Finally, we developed an introduction to each constituency group in each state. It was created through "facts and figures" research, phone calls to key leaders in each constituency group, and by summarizing the questionnaire responses.

HOW THE PROFILES ARE ORGANIZED

The profiles are divided into four volumes: one each for Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. These four volumes are further divided into nine separate sections, each corresponding to one of the nine constituency groups. These sections are arranged alphabetically, and each one contains:

1. An introduction to each constituency group which describes its characteristics, summarizes the environmental concerns of its members, and gives some ideas about how EPA might go about improving communication with members of that group.
2. An alphabetical index of those organizations which responded to our questionnaire and the page within the section where their profiles can be found.
3. The "Profiles" themselves: the condensed and formatted responses from each organization.
4. A cross-reference of organizations from other constituency groups which also consider themselves to be part of this group.
5. A mailing list of the organizations which were identified in that constituency group.

HOW TO USE THESE PROFILES

Included in these profiles are every organization that we could discover in the nine constituency groups in each state, a total of nearly 3500. They range from the Portland Urban Indian Council to Rural Alaska Community Action, and from the Spokane YWCA to the Idaho Outdoor Association. As the comments of organizations which responded to our questionnaire reveal, many organizations in Region 10 have little or no direct interest in EPA and its activities. Their interests and those of the EPA simply do not coincide.

Additionally, many of these same organizations have no clear idea of what EPA is and what it does. EPA thus gets the blame or credit for activities of the U.S. Forest Service, the various state departments of ecology, the U.S. Department of Energy, and the federal court system. Thus, in order to improve communication with many organizations, EPA faces a formidable task of educating them to its purposes and to a lesser extent those of other state and federal agencies. While we have suggested in our introductions to several of these constituencies that this may be the best way to improve communication, it remains up to the EPA to determine if such an effort is justified.

As a starting point for communicating with organizations in Region 10, these profiles do several things:

1. They identify who's out there. As we mentioned above, these profiles do not contain every organization in the Region, but they do contain the most important ones and are probably the most comprehensive such listing available. They enable EPA to know who its constituents are. If an even more detailed listing of these constituents proves to be desirable, these lists provide a point from which to begin a more detailed compilation.

2. They are a start at identifying which of these organizations are concerned about the EPA and the environment. Those organizations which responded to our questionnaire are the ones most likely to be interested in public hearings, changes in EPA regulations, or entering into a dialogue on environmental protection. Furthermore, the profiles not only report the main environmental concerns (whether or not they are EPA's responsibility) of each organization and constituency group, they also identify specifically which EPA program areas they are interested in. This gives EPA an idea of who to approach about a specific issue.

3. The profiles, finally, provide a format which can be expanded as more organizations interested in EPA activities are identified. Both at the end of each individual profile, and at the end of each constituency group, room has been left for additional comments and for the inclusion of additional organizations. Thus, these profiles can grow to include the changing and growing list of organizations interested in EPA.

SUMMARY

These profiles were prepared as a tool for EPA to use in communicating with organizations in Region 10. It is our belief that the first step in communicating with another is to understand her/his perceptions and beliefs, to learn to see the world through her/his eyes. These profiles attempt to do this by recording the perceptions of organizations throughout the Region. Many of these viewpoints are critical of EPA and its activities. It is not our intent in preparing these profiles to endorse or validate this criticism -- the views expressed in the profiles of individual organizations are those of the organization profiled and do not necessarily correspond to those of the preparer. Rather we have sought to record these viewpoints accurately so that EPA can know which organizations or constituency groups would like to see it be more active, which less active, and which aren't at all sure what it does. These perceptions can thus inform any efforts EPA may wish to make to improve communication with these organizations.

Further, in our introduction to each of the constituency groups, we have provided whatever background seemed relevant to understanding the concerns and viewpoints of these organizations. Additionally, each concludes with a recommendation about what EPA might do to improve communication with this group. These opinions are our own and do not necessarily reflect EPA thinking or future plans. We do hope, however, that these suggestions and the information contained in these profiles will be useful to EPA in whatever efforts it undertakes to communicate with the organizations which make up its constituency in Region 10.

WASHINGTON AGRICULTURE

In Washington, we have identified approximately 150 agricultural organizations. Most of these are associations of growers or producers of a specific product, such as the Washington Fruit Commission or the Columbia Basin Wool Growers. These organizations operate either statewide or in a specific region or locality where these producers are concentrated. In addition to these grower's organizations there are groups, such as the Washington State Grange or the Wenatchee Valley Traffic Association, which seek to represent all the agriculturalists in the state or a region. This introduction to the Washington Agriculture Constituency provides an overview of the State's most important agricultural activities and the environmental concerns of its producers and processors.

In 1979, Washington agricultural production increased by 8% to a record $2.4 billion, while the food processing industry grossed an additional $4.1 billion. Although 80% of this value is produced in Eastern Washington, agriculture is an important factor in the economy in all sections of the state. Field crops, wheat, hay, and potatoes, which are grown mostly east of the Cascades, make up the largest portion of this amount. Other important crops in the eastern part of the state are barley, oats, apples, cherries, pears, peaches, and apricots. The raising of livestock, both sheep and cattle, is also important east of the Cascades. On the western side of the mountains, the major agricultural products are vegetables, flower bulbs, berries, and dairy products.

The major issues confronting Washington agriculture in the 1980's are those common to all sections of society and include: energy availability and price, inflation and the cost of credit, and the impact of governmental regulations on business practices. For agriculturalists, however, these problems have special meaning. Rising energy costs directly impact the cost for plowing, planting and harvesting, and also increase the cost of transporting farm products to markets. Inflation and high interest rates also have a strong impact on agriculture because of the need for substantial capital investment in farm machinery.

These economic pressures add up to a demand for maximum possible production per acre. It is not surprising therefore, that the issue of most concern to the agricultural associations surveyed is the problem of federal regulations which seem to restrict their ability to produce a maximum yield. Chief among these regulations are those concerned with the use of chemical pesticides and herbicides. Farmers point out that the agricultural strength of this nation has been built only because of technological progress, including the use of chemicals, which enable the farmer to achieve higher yields. Farmers, therefore, typically express their environmental concerns as "working to maintain a reasonable balance between the needs of environmental controls and practical needs of producing our crops."

Agriculturalists seem to be one of the best informed constituency groups. Almost every questionnaire returned indicated a thorough familiarity with regulations, processes, and actions which impact farmers. As indicated above the majority of agriculturalists are concerned about the need for balance, and, in fact, see themselves as the earliest environmentalists. They therefore resent being placed in an adversary role, and often feel they are cast as the "bad guys." However, most expressed or implied a willingness to work with EPA and other regulatory officials even though they feel that the importance of maintaining cost controls in high yield agriculture is seriously underrated.

Given the knowledge most members of the agriculture constituency already have of the EPA, EPA's challenge in improving communications with them won't be so much in communicating information to them but rather in establishing a dialogue with them. As noted above, most of them expressed a willingness to engage in such a dialogue and would probably respond to EPA overtures in this direction.

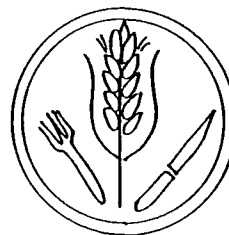

What follows is an alphabetical index of those organizations that responded to our questionnaire. It is followed, in turn, by the profiles themselves.

Environmental
Concerns

"Our members are all concerned about our environment, however, pesticide misuse and abuse which kills our bees is the number one problem of beekeepers in Washington State..." "We would like to see Pennwalt Corporation product, Pennncap-M (which is encapsulated methyl parathion) taken off the market -- it not only kills adult bees in the field, but the adults also collect pollen contaminated with the microcapsules. This is fed to the brood thus killing them too. We are also against any other encapsulated pesticides being approved and put on the market. We are for EPA gaining a better control on making sure pesticides are used according to label -- thus preventing most bee kills. We are encouraged by EPA's recent efforts to gain more data on bee kills from pesticides. 'Solicitation of the Beekeeping Industry for Cooperation in the Reporting of Pesticide Involvement in Bee Kills' and 'Outline of Protocol for the Reporting, Sampling and Investigation of Pesticide Incidents Resulting in Honeybee Kills' are two big steps forward for EPA. We, of course, disagreed with the approval of Pennncap-M and regret that this product is on the market, not only because it kills bees but because too little is known about what else it is doing to the environment.

Our latest was to enter strong protests to EPA and FAA on the proposals of "Friends of the Earth" to so severely restrict aerial and ground spraying that it would have been impossible to farm a million acres of good agricultural land. We believe EPA is now more reasonable in weighing in the economic impact before issuing regulations. We believe EPA must speed up the process of registering and re-registering agricultural chemicals. We believe the RPAR process is unnecessarily burdensome. Agriculture is facing a shortage of necessary new materials because the process leading to registration is too costly."

Agriculture

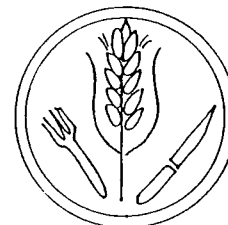

Name of Organization	WASHINGTON STATE PEST MANAGEMENT ALLIANCE
Address	711 Capitol Way #608 Olympia, WA 98501 (206) 352-1500
Contact Person	Robert P. Matthews, President
Communication Tools	Periodic Mailing upon need
Organizational Information	"We represent private associations of the farm and forestry interests and allied service industries in Washington State. Our constituents represent the owners of more than 11,000,000 acres of agricultural and forest land."
Environmental Concerns	The Alliance wants to assure that food and fibre needs can be achieved economically. They have taken positions defending the safe use of pesticides and have been involved in the herbicide controversy. They agreed with EPA that 2,4,5-T should be RPARED in order to clear the air on that controversial herbicide and that there was insufficient evidence to warrent RPAR of 2,4-D. They disagreed with what they see as EPA's poor work associated with the Alsea studies in Oregon, with the emergency suspension of 2,4,5-T, and EPA's failure to renew forestry spraying while other uses continue after Alsea studies were soundly rejected by the scientific community.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Pesticides.

Name of Organization	WASHINGTON STATE RABBIT BREEDER'S ASSOCIATION
Address	5620 E. 112th Street Puyallup, WA 98371 (206) 845-0145
Contact Person	Jan Coffelt, President L. Jake Saum
Communication Tools	"Washington State Rabbit Breeder's Association Journal"
Organizational Information	The Association is composed of rabbit breeders and is active on the state and local levels.
Environmental Concerns	Its top environmental concerns are clean air and clean water, but to date it has not taken positions on environmental issues.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Water Quality, Toxic Substances, and Pesticides.

Name of Organization	WESTERN WASHINGTON FARM CROPS ASSOCIATION, INC.
Address	1354 Old Highway 99 N. Burlington, WA 98233 (206) 424-7164
Contact Person	Roger Nelson, President Peter T. Sword, Manager
Communication Tools	newsletter; Agrow Marketer (magazine); Annual Report
Organizational Information	The Association has 425 member farmers and is active on a regional level.
Environmental Concerns	The Association wants to maintain and enhance the environment for the production of vegetables for marketing and processing. Although the Association has not taken positions on environmental issues, it agreed with EPA in the areas of PCB control, industrial emission control, and environmental impact legislation. It disagreed with EPA in its conflict with the Department of Labor on pesticide evaluation and about herbicide control of forest lands which plays into the hands of "undesirable interests" and cuts productivity due to the cost and technique of control.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Water Quality, Toxic Substances, and Pesticides.

BUSINESS

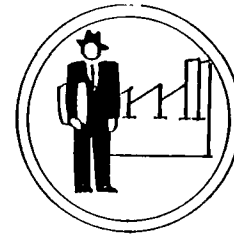

WASHINGTON BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

We have identified more than 200 organizations in the Business and Industry Constituency group in Washington. These are not individual companies, but rather organizations of several or more businesses and industries. Some, such as the Association of Washington Business, the various Chambers of Commerce, and other groups have a broad focus. Others, such as the Northwest Pulp and Paper Association, the Asphalt Paving Association of Washington, or the Western Oil and Gas Association, focus on a specific business or industry. This introduction to the Business and Industry Constituency in Washington will summarize the major industries of the state, their geographic concentration, major concerns and interests, and their environmental priorities.

Major industries in the State of Washington include aerospace, lumber and other forest products, primary metals (particularly aluminum), and tourism. The aerospace and forest products industries were equally responsible for 48% of Washington's gross manufacturing income in 1979. Most of Washington's manufacturing is clustered in the Central Puget Sound area where 60% of the states manufacturing employees, including those of Boeing (the state's largest employer) work. General wholesale and retail trade are distributed in approximately the same proportions as the population (almost 70% live in the "Western Corridor", along the coast west of the Cascades).

Representatives of Business and Industry are in general agreement that a list of the major issues confronting them today would have to include inflation, energy costs, and the expense involved in complying with a multitude of governmental regulations. They stress the fact that these issues have a particularly strong impact on small businesses which can least afford any added costs of operation. A major concern to businesses of all sizes is any political activity which impacts the general economy and/or their basic cost of doing business. For this reason, many of the major businesses in the state and some of their associations have full-time lobbyists in the state legislature. In addition, many of these same businesses and associations are involved in the political process in Washington and strongly support those candidates who express an awareness of and concern for their interests. Of the other constituency groups, only labor and agriculture come close to the degree of involvement, knowledge, and activity, that business and industry exhibit in governmental activities.

While business is often cast as the "bad guy" in the environmental protection conflict, statements by business leaders do not bear this out. The Gray's Harbor Chamber of Commerce, for instance, comments that the biggest environmental problem is "balancing environmental concerns with the need to sustain and create jobs", while the Longview Chamber of Commerce echoes that viewpoint in their statement that the "Chamber is committed to cleaning up the environment and to insure that environmental concern is balanced with the necessity of economic growth to provide jobs." Most business leaders feel that their needs and interests are not taken into account by the EPA in formulating its regulations. For instance, the Inland Empire Electrical League says "our main concern with EPA is that the agency does not seem to take into account the tremendous costs of their fiats. It would appear that EPA has a low opinion of the ability of others to make sound decisions in regard to environmental issues."

Specific environmental concerns of the Business and Industry Constituency are directly related to the positions stated above and to the resource needs of the particular industry. For example, any business active in the forest products industry is concerned about access to timber on public lands and the cost of such access. The aluminum industry has been concerned and actively involved in state legislation regarding solid waste disposal (aluminum recycling). That same industry's need for abundant electrical energy at a reasonable cost has prompted their attention to regulations aimed at the water resources of this state. To the extent that EPA regulations impact their ability to do business, members of this constituency group oppose the development of these regulations. Their primary concern is that their interests be recognized in the development of regulations which affect them.

Organizations which represent large segments of the Business and Industry Constituency include the Chambers of Commerce, the Association of Washington Business, and the various organizations which represent the major industries (for example, the Northwest Pulp and Paper Association). In general, however, the greatest problem in improving communications with this constituency is not how to contact or inform these groups, since they are on the whole already quite knowledgeable about environmental issues and actively involved in them. The greater need appears to be the creation of a relationship in which there is a feeling that all sides of an issue are heard and carefully considered before a decision is made.

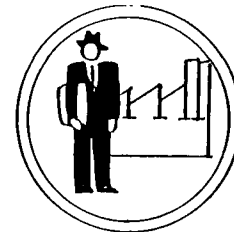

What follows is an alphabetical Index of organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It is followed, in turn, by the profiles themselves.

AAA
229 Main
Walla Walla, WA 99362

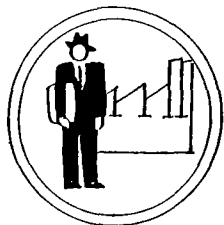

Environmental
Concerns

The Association is concerned with Air Quality as it relates to the automobile. The Association has taken official positions "against mandatory motor vehicle inspection/maintenance", has "helped develop an air strategy plan for Spokane," and "has supported the parking ban, increased transit, and a public transit benefit area." They have agreed with EPA's actions not to require inspection/maintenance for Spokane and "to permit SIP to seek its own performance level." They have disagreed with EPA's opinion that inspection and maintenance are the only way CO can be eliminated and that 9 parts per million CO is "scientifically and medically detrimental to health."

Contact Person	Llewellyn Matthews, Director
Communication Tools	a newsletter; an annual report
Organizational Information	None stated.
Environmental Concerns	The Association's priorities "are equal in regard to environmental and energy issues affecting the pulp and paper industry." The Association has taken positions on "1) consolidated permits, 2) the failure of Washington State Department of Ecology to address Alabama Power decision in recent pulp mill regulation, 3) emission offset policy, and 4) lack of relationship between opacity and mass emission standards for particulate emission control." It has agreed with EPA's two week notice period for commencing action under Clean Water Act, policies regarding emission offsets, and the "Bubble" concept. It disagreed with EPA's "BCT standards for pulp and paper industry, consolidated permits, and recently proposed RCRA regulations."
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Water Quality, Noise, and Toxic Substances.

Communication Tools	"Pipelines" (newsletter); frequent bulletins
Organizational Information	The Association has ten member companies in Oregon and Washington who produce concrete pipe and related products plus twenty-three associate and affiliate member companies. The Association is active on a regional level.
Environmental Concerns	The Association is concerned "with the orderly conduct of a competitive business, as suppliers of basic engineering products essential to water pollution control." They "have made recommendations related to minority brokers of construction materials ('Sham' brokers form no useful function, increase costs to taxpayers, and the practice does not benefit minorities.)" The Association has agreed with Region X's efforts to deal with the sham broker problem and supports its policies in listing competitive materials as alternatives in bidding. The Association has the "general impression that the funding process is too slow and cumbersome."
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Water Quality.

Name of Organization	UTILITY CONTRACTORS ASSOCIATION OF WASHINGTON
Address	13555 Bel Red Road, Suite 109 Bellevue, WA 98005 (206) 624-7711
Contact Person	Trish Wolters, Executive Director Clint Campbell, President Rick Egge, Regional Vice-President
Communication Tools	"The Pipeline" (newsletter); monthly membership meetings
Organizational Information	The Association has 101 member firms of whom 60 are suppliers and support businesses and 41 are firms involved in the wastewater construction business. It is active primarily at a local level but also regionally and statewide.
Environmental Concerns	Because of the nature of their business, Association members are primarily concerned with clean water. They have taken positions endorsing the Clean Water Act, supporting Magnuson's amendment to sub-committee supplemental appropriations bill, and opposing FmHA recession proposal by Carter. They have agreed with EPA actions "endorsing the delegation of authority to the state, increased sensitivity to contractors plight in conforming with WMBE percentages, and encouraging triad participation between minorities, prime contractors, and agency communicators." They have disagreed with EPA's "attempts to override state priority systems" and the "headquarters decision" to inequitably distribute the play-out of Carter's frozen funds to states who are on schedule with the result that states that have expended their funds are punished most. Finally the Contractors appreciate EPA's sensitivity to their market and believe that communication will increase the understanding and reduce adversary effects.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Water Quality and Drinking Water.

ENVIRONMENT

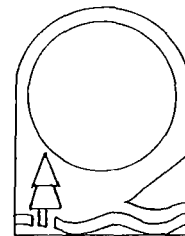

WASHINGTON ENVIRONMENT

The State of Washington includes within its boundaries three national parks, nine national forests, more than 100 state parks, and over 2,000 miles of marked hiking trails. More than 36 million people visited these preserved natural environments in 1977, and the outdoor recreation/tourist industry is one of the most rapidly growing industries in the Pacific Northwest. The state has an extraordinary variety of climates and terrains, including coastal shores and islands, alpine lakes in volcanic mountain formations, river estuaries and flood plains, and dry, hilly deserts. The area is part of that last section of the continental United States to be explored, and consequently much of it is still relatively undeveloped and sparsely populated.

Given the diversity and quality of the environment, it is not surprising that we have been able to identify more than 100 groups which, broadly speaking, are dedicated to environmental protection and the preservation of various sections of the state. The specific concerns of these environmental groups range from the protection of a small neighborhood park, lake, or other "natural" area, to the regulations affecting use of national parks and forests, and from opposing nuclear power to restricting the use of pesticides. The information below describes the environmental constituency, their concerns, and the ways in which they and their concerns relate to other groups in the state.

The groups identified in our survey range from the 25 member Tacoma group, Save Our Shorelines (SOS), to the 3500 member Seattle Audubon Society, which is one branch of a national organization. Most of these organizations have individual memberships, although some are coalitions of groups, and a few are officially appointed membership committees, such as the Ecology Commission of Richland. Most have a broad focus regarding environmental protection although a few of the groups, such as the Friends of Discovery Park, the Lake Hicks Improvement Committee in Seattle, and No Oilport, Inc. in Port Angeles, are focused on quite specific geographical areas or issues. The methods used to reach similar goals also vary: a number of the groups follow state and local legislation closely and concentrate their efforts on influencing the regulatory actions on behalf of environmental preservation. The Nature Conservatory, on the other hand, does try to influence legislation, but its main thrust is the direct acquisition of property to maintain it in a natural state. This group shares with most of these organizations the goal of defending "species, ecosystems, and habitats...(which are) most rare or threatened."

Specific environmental concerns which were mentioned by these groups include: damage to wilderness areas by logging, livestock grazing, and other commercial activities; the effects on wildlife habitat when previously closed (roadless) wilderness areas are opened by the addition of logging roads or other access; and the effects on wildlife habitat, including those of fish, when rivers are dammed or otherwise altered.

Many of these organizations can count some major successes in past actions to preserve Washington's natural areas. However, one of their most pressing current concerns is that immediate economic pressures will cause decision-makers to lean toward development of previously preserved areas.

Almost every one of these organizations are, not surprisingly, very well informed about recent and pending EPA activities. They are generally supportive of EPA, except where they feel that too much has been lost in an effort to "compromise" with economic considerations. There is a sharp contrast here with the representatives of the Business and Industry Constituency who generally call for "reasonable" environmental protection AND economic growth. The representatives of environmental groups might argue that any "compromise" will cause the lose of a unique ecosystem to all future generations.

In contrast to most of the other constituency groups, maintaining contact with environmental groups is not a major problem since most of them consider it in their best interests to stay informed about proposed and pending EPA activities. Furthermore, though some organizations will argue that EPA does not go far enough in its protection efforts, virtually all are supportive of EPA's existence and activities. Perhaps the greatest communication need of this constituency is the need for a better dialogue between these groups and other groups who have previously assumed an adversary relationship with "those environmentalists".

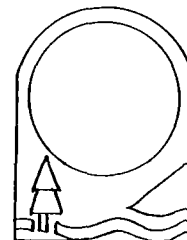

What follows is an alphabetical Index of those environmental organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It is followed by the profiles themselves.

Name of Organization	AIR QUALITY COALITION
Address	216 Broadway East Seattle, WA 98102 (206) 322-7110
Contact Person	Janet Chalupnik, President
Communication Tools	Letters; phone calls; Testimony at hearings
Organizational Information	The coalition has 18 member organization and is active at the state and regional levels.
Environmental Concerns	Its primary focus is on air pollution. The Coalition has taken positions in favor of inspection and maintenance of automobiles, of maintaining a stricter ozone standard than the federal one, and of increasing the fine for air pollution violations. It has agreed with EPA's action in "issuing notice of violation to ASARCO smelter in Tacoma," in "requiring inspection/maintenance programs in states receiving extensions on meeting air quality standards," and in "requiring public participation in air pollution programs." They have disagreed with EPA's "relaxation of ambient standards for ozone" their "removal of local regulations from SIP," and their "failure to set an arsenic standard."
EPA Program Areas of Information	Air Quality.

Organizational
Information

This is one of a number of chapters of the National Audubon Society in the State of Washington. It has approximately 200 memberships (many of them family) and is active locally. (see also Seattle, Olympic Peninsula, and Yakima Valley chapters).

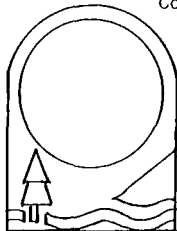

Environmental
Concerns

The environmental priorities of its members are human health, animal health, aesthetics, and cost/benefit. They have taken positions opposing oil transshipment in the State of Washington and for the preservation of the Nisqually Delta and Protection Island. They agreed with EPA's plans for more stringent visibility controls but disagreed with their relaxation of ozone standards and their delays in standards for NOX and HC pollutants.

Name of Organization	SEATTLE AUDUBON SOCIETY
Address	619 Joshua Green Bldg. Seattle, WA 98166 (206) 622-6695
Contact Person	David Galvin, President Lorna Campion, Conservation Chairman
Communication Tools	"Audubon Notes" (newsletter)
Organizational Information	This is one of 16 Audubon Society chapters in the State of Washington. It is a non-profit corporation whose purpose is "to educate its members and the public about natural history and to promote conservation of natural (especially wildlife) resources." It has 3,500 members and is active on a state and local level. (see also Yakima Valley, Olympic Peninsula, and Vancouver Chapters).
Environmental Concerns	The Chapter's prime concern is the preservation/protection of wildlife habitat and of a healthy human environment. It has opposed the construction of the Northern Tier Pipeline but did not state agreement or disagreement with any EPA actions.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Water Quality, Toxic Substances, and Pesticides.

Communication Tools	"Columbia Flyway" (newsletter)
Organizational Information	This is a local chapter of the National Audubon Society. It has about 225 members who are active on the local level. (see also Seattle, Olympic Peninsula, and Yakima Valley Chapters).
Environmental Concerns	The Chapter's prime concern is to preserve a quality habitat for fish and wildlife. The group has taken positions on Protection Island and on the Washington Bottle Bill. They agreed with EPA's taking over 404 enforcement from the Corps of Engineers but can't think of other actions with which they have agreed. They have disagreed with EPA's giving Washington State officials control over "deadly pesticides such as 1080," funding/building sewage plants "in wetlands e.g. Washougal," and funding of the Vancouver Lake Reclamation, a project which is "destructive to fish and wildlife habitat and will not clean up the lake or provide water contact sports."

Address	Box 9701 Yakima, WA 98909 (206) 452-5890
Contact Person	Fred H. Westberg, President
Communication Tools	"Calliope Crier" (monthly newsletter) Audubon Magazine (national magazine)
Organizational Information	This is a local chapter of the National Audubon Society. "The Yakima Valley Audubon Society has a membership of 265 people. It includes both men and women, most of whom are fairly mature in age. Included are both urban and rural dwellers. Most of them are directly interested in wildlife especially birds, native plants and trees, care of the environment, wilderness and preservation of agricultural lands." It is active on a state and local level. (see also Seattle, Olympic Peninsula, and Vancouver Chapters).
Environmental	The primary environmental concerns of its members are protection of the environment from unwise development or abuse, protection of wildlife, preservation of endangered species of both wildlife and plantlife, designation of appropriate areas of wilderness, and the protection of agricultural lands from unwise development. This chapter has taken positions for the designation of a cougar Lake Wilderness, a Juniper Forest Wilderness, and a wildlife sanctuary for McNeil Island, endorsing a Yakima River Greenway Park in Yakima County, and approving a bird sanctuary on Protection Island near Port Angeles. They have agreed with EPA's emission controls on automobiles and industries, their improved quality controls on rivers and lakes, and their research on air purity. They are not well informed on EPA. However, they "believe that a deliberate and purposeful effort should be made to conserve energy, and that it should receive strenuous effort by EPA both state, national, and local."

Organizational Information	The Association has about twenty members and is active locally.
Environmental Concerns	The Association has been in existence for 10 years and has primarily been concerned with public education on environmental issues. For the past three years, its members have run a recycling center which has taken most of their time. They generally approve of EPA activities. They are concerned however, that EPA puts too much emphasis on disposal methods and not enough on alternatives of reuse and recovery especially through low technology recycling.

Contact Person	Cheryl Savage President Georgia E. Hoglund, Organizational Coordinator
Communication Tools	"Citizens for Alternatives to Toxic Herbicides Newsletter" brochures on toxic substances
Organizational Information	CEQ is active on a regional basis as an advocacy organization for victims of toxic exposure.
Environmental Concerns	CEQ's environmental priorities are strong citizen input and participation in decisions that effect their health and welfare, Integrated Pest Management (IPM) as a way of dealing with pests on a national level, hazardous waste disposal, wild and scenic rivers, forest management planning, and air and water quality. "CEQ has taken the position that we are against the use of herbicides as a means of vegetation management by the USFS in North Idaho." CEQ also actively supported the Idaho Department of Agriculture's noxious weed IPM plan and intervened in air quality hearings on behalf of Idaho Health and Welfare. The CEQ agreed with EPA's suspension of 2,4,5-T and Silvex, the preparation of a public participation policy, and the help EPA has given CEQ in understanding what is going on within EPA. They have disagreed with EPA for its discontinuation of the toll free number for public use (they have found it difficult to get hold of individuals in EPA), their position on 2,4-D, their failure to conduct or fund public education programs on pesticide laws, and the cover up of the fact that 2,4-D was used with Silvex in the Alsea Basin.

Organizational
Information

The Columbia River Citizens Compact was incorporated in the State of Oregon in October 1979. Membership information is currently being prepared. It has a fifteen member Board of Directors with specific Task Forces on Fish, Wildlife, Energy, Watershed, Water Management, Columbia River Estuary, and the Hanford Reach. The Organization's purposes are "to sustain and support the Columbia River as our lifeline, to guard against further publically financed alterations intended for private gain, and to restore that part of the natural treasury which has been lost or destroyed..." The group has adopted a detailed set of guidelines by which it will measure its efforts to preserve and protect the River.

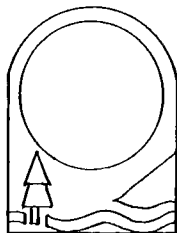

Environmental
Concerns

The Compact has taken "positions in support of water requirements for fish and wildlife in the Columbia River and Tributaries; specifically PNW Regional Energy Bill and the Columbia River Institute Flow regulations of the Washington State Department of Ecology; opposed transmission line to cross a wildlife refuge; endorsed Wild River designation for the Hanford Reach of the Columbia River; and other similar action." To date, the Board of Directors has not taken positions with respect; to EPA actions.

Address	P.O. Box 99204 Seattle, WA 98199 (206) 633-3364
Contact Person	Bob Kildall
Communication Tools	"Between Friends" (newsletter)
Organizational Information	This organization is dedicated to maintaining Discovery Park as a natural area in the City of Seattle. It has 600 members and is active locally.
Environmental Concerns	Friends of Discovery Park is primarily concerned with the preservation of the Park as a natural area of beaches, sea cliffs, sand dunes, meadows, and woods. They have taken numerous positions in support of that concern. For instance, they have opposed a golf course in the Park, opposed the construction of a sports stadium and a restaurant in or near the park, helped the City obtain Coast Guard land as an addition to the Park, and currently support the demolition of an old army barracks in the Park and the return of the land to its natural state. They have agreed with EPA's ban of certain pesticides, with its "half-hearted" efforts to reduce auto pollution, and its "tardy" efforts to control toxics in waste water. They have disagreed with EPA's low level of fines on polluters, with the high noise level standards that have been established, and with the regulations established for administering Secondary Treatment Movers.

Organizational Information	The Organization has approximately 500 dues paying members and is active on a regional basis.
Environmental Concerns	Its primary environmental concerns are to maintain and hopefully improve air quality and to preserve water quality for rivers and salt water bodies. Its members have taken positions opposing crude oil transshipment in Washington State, raised questions on potential air quality and water quality degradation by the Northern Tier Pipeline proposal, and participated in the state implementation plan for air quality hearings. They have agreed with EPA's letter to Washington State Siting Council critiquing the state environmental impact statement for the Northern Tier Pipeline, their recommendation to DOI against Port Angeles as an oilport site because of explosion risk, and for pushing the DOE on the issues of non-attainment for Port Angeles. They disagreed with EPA for meeting privately with Northern Tier officials after the public comment period and then reversing its stand on the Port Angeles oilport site, and for accepting Northern Tier Pipeline Company air quality data on a confidential basis.

Organizational Information	This is one of 25 chapters of the Northwest Steelhead and Salmon Council in Washington. It has 200 members and is active on local, state, and regional levels. Its main headquarters is in Renton.
Environmental Concerns	The Council's top environmental concerns are "water quality, fisheries, estuaries, rivers, and wetlands." Its members have taken positions on the Grays Harbor Channel Deepening Project, Quigg Brothers McDonald Chehalis Dredging Project, Indian net fishing for steelhead trout, the discharge permits for twin nuclear plants at Satsop. They do not know of any EPA actions with which they agreed. They disagreed with the EPA for allowing construction of Wynoochee Dam, for not trying to stop the proposed Grays Harbor Channel Deepening Project, and for not opposing Quigg Brothers McDonald Chehalis Dredging Project. They are also concerned about "a serious water quality problem in the lower Chehalis River or Grays Harbor Estuary. There has been over the years a high mortality rate of downstream migrating salmon and steelhead trout. Over the years we have been unable to get any action from any state or federal agency to test or find remedies for the 'Pollution Block'."

Organizational Information	This organization has about 60 members from a variety of backgrounds and is active on a local level.
Environmental Concerns	The prime concern of this organization is the contamination of streams and rivers, including drinking water sources, with chemicals. It has taken positions objecting to Forest Service and Department of Natural Resources slash burning during an inversion in 1979, instances of chemical trespass by ITT, and reported school spraying with Karlan and resulting illness of teachers and students. Its members agreed with EPA actions in sampling deer and elk fat and mother's milk for dioxin testing, the suspension of 2,4,5-T and silvex, recall for further testing of other chemicals, and the ban of PCBs for widespread use. They disagreed with EPA for accepting chemicals for registration without in-depth study of test results, registering chemical combinations with too loosely delineated use directions on labels, insufficient investigation of reports of misuse, and the lack of funding for environmental groups willing to assist EPA in carrying out studies.

LABOR

WASHINGTON LABOR

Two hundred labor organizations in Washington State have been included in this constituency group. This is by no means a total list of every local union in the state. Instead, this list includes the statewide unions, central labor councils, trade unions, and the major locals in the cities of Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, and the Tri-Cities. This introduction to the Labor Constituency in Washington will briefly examine the extent of unionization in the State, the environmental concerns of these union, and difficulties in communicating with them.

Washington is the nation's third most unionized state with 33.1% of its 1.3 million non-agricultural workers belong to a labor union. The construction and manufacturing fields are the most heavily unionized although unions are also strong in government, communications, and transportation. In 1979, Washington's gross manufacturing income was 27.7 billion dollars, with forest products and aerospace industry sharing equally in about 48% of the total. Primary metal industries, especially aluminum, account for about 10% of the gross income. All these major industries have strong unions.

As might be expected, the labor unions that responded to our questionnaire listed job-related problems as their prime environmental concerns. However, these concerns divided the group into two categories: those unions that want environmental regulations to help keep their workplaces safe and those who are concerned that protecting the environment be balanced with the need to protect jobs and maintain economic growth. Thus, the Communications Workers of America, Local 9102 in Seattle, lists "health hazards at work" as their prime concern, while the Port Angeles Central Labor Council wants to "protect the environment and jobs", and the Northeastern Washington Northern Idaho Building and Trades Council took a "positive stance on the Northern Tier Pipeline", a project which would provide jobs for its members.

However, what is perhaps most striking about the organizations in this constituency group is their lack of concern about environmental issues. Fully 30% of those that responded to our questionnaires failed to list any environmental concerns or issues on which they had taken positions. Those that did respond tended to list what might be called "global" concerns; that is, those that focus on general overarching issues such as air quality or safe workplaces without any expressed knowledge of specific ways in which these goals might be achieved. Their concerns are those of people interested in environmental issues in a general, detached way, but who don't see their daily lives impacted.

This lack of specific knowledge carries directly over to their understanding of EPA and its actions. Only two of the unions that responded to our questionnaire were able to list EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed. Only one union mentioned any past contact with EPA.

Thus, if EPA is to establish better communications with the unions in Washington, it must overcome two obstacles. First is the simple lack of concern that the unions have about environmental issues. They will have to be shown how EPA and the environment are important to them. The second problem is dealing with the split in the constituency between those who want to use environmental regulations to protect themselves at the workplace and those who want to make sure that environmental regulations are balanced with continued economic growth and jobs for their members. Careful consideration will have to be given to exactly how to approach this constituency.

What follows is an alphabetical Index of those unions which responded to our questionnaires and the profiles which contain their responses.

Name of Organization	ALASKA FISHERMAN'S UNION
Address	2505 1st Avenue Room 3 Seattle, WA 98121 (206) 623-2981
Contact Person	Kenneth O. Olson, Secretary-Treasurer
Communication Tools	occasional newsletters and use of "The Fishermen's News"
Organizational Information	The Union has over 3,000 members who work as boatmen, culinary workers, beachmen, and cannery workers. There is another local in Bellingham: c/o Carl Roskela 203 W. Holly Bellingham, WA 98225
Environmental Concerns	Their chief concern is keeping the water clean and unpolluted. They worry that chemical pollution of offshore areas will hurt the fishing industry. They have taken positions, however, that favor the dumping of wastes from canneries back into the ocean since they feel that it is beneficial for the environment if there is good tidal flow.

MINORITIES

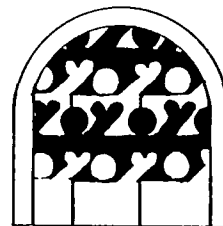

WASHINGTON MINORITIES

We have identified approximately 100 organizations representing Native Americans, Asian Americans, Blacks and Hispanics, the four principle minority groups in Washington. These four groups constitute 8.1% of Washington's total population of 3,911,000 and are often lumped together as one constituency. However, they can be understood more easily as four distinct groups, each with its own organizations and concerns. This introduction to the minority constituency in Washington will look at each group in turn, their environmental priorities, and how they might best be reached.

Native Americans constitute 1.4% of the state's population. They are the best organized and most environmentally concerned of these four minority groups. There are 34 tribes in the state; 30 west of the Cascades and four, including the Yakimas and Colvilles which are the two biggest, east of the mountains. Economic development and environmental protection rank as the top priorities for these tribes. For many of them, natural resources (either in the form of fisheries, timbering, or, for the Colvilles, molybdenum) are their chief economic asset, and they want to make sure that these assets are used wisely. Native Americans can best be reached through the tribal councils of the 34 tribes. One other organization, the Small Tribes of Western Washington, represents 16 tribes west of the mountains and could easily distribute information to them.

By official estimates Asian Americans constitute 1.8% of Washington's population. However, most representatives of Asian-American organizations believe that this figure is low and point to the fact that 18,000 Indo-Chinese refugees have entered the state since 1979 and that this figure is expected to be equalled again in 1981. Most Asian-Americans live in Seattle and, to a lesser extent, in the state's other urban areas. Their concerns, and especially those of the recent refugees, are those typically associated with immigrant groups: employment, discrimination, access to education, and upward mobility. Environmental issues are clearly secondary to these other concerns. There is no one organization that speaks for Asian-Americans in the state, and no active network of those organizations that do exist.

There are approximately 88,300 Blacks in Washington who make of 2.3% of the total population. They are concentrated primarily in the cities of Seattle and Tacoma with small pockets in Spokane and the Tri-Cities. The attitudes of Blacks towards the environment are quite diverse. However, low income Blacks are often so concerned with the difficulties of economic survival that they do not have the time or energy to be concerned about environmental issues. Problems such as housing costs, employment, crime, and education far outweigh concerns about environmental quality. Black organizations such as the NAACP and the Urban League exist to help black deal with these immediate problems and, as a result, are not much concerned with environmental issues -- nor do they have members who are much concerned about the environment.

The largest minority group in Washington is people with Spanish surnames, who constitute 2.4% of the state's population. They are scattered throughout Washington with concentrations in the Seattle/King County area, the Yakima Valley, and the Columbia River Basin. Like other minority groups, they confront the problems of discrimination, unemployment, and poverty, which put environmental concerns in the background. One environmental issue that is important, however, is that of pesticide use. Many Hispanics work as migrant laborers in fields where pesticides are sprayed, and there is some concern among them about the health problems which may result from this exposure.

Fifteen minority organizations responded to our questionnaire. By far the majority of these responses (9) came from Native American groups. They listed the protection of fisheries and forestry resources as their prime environmental concern and were generally agreed that they want economic growth balanced with environmental protection. Of these nine respondents, five had been in contact with the EPA and had felt that contact to be positive.

Of the other six responses (3 Asian American, 2 Black, and 1 Hispanic), none had any previous contact with the EPA. Furthermore, none of them have taken positions on environmental issues and generally did not express any environmental concerns.

In this constituency, the Native Americans seem to be easiest for EPA to reach since they are actively concerned about protecting the natural resources on their land and can be reached through a relatively small number of tribal councils. Members of the other three minority groups seem to be much less interested in environmental issues and therefore would be more difficult to reach. The possible exception to this might be Hispanic groups that are concerned about the health impact of pesticide use.

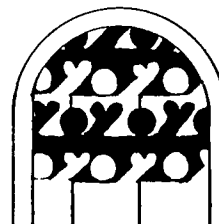

What follows is an Index of those minority organizations that responded to our questionnaires. It, in turn, is followed by the profiles themselves.

PUBLIC INTEREST

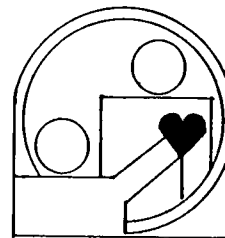

WASHINGTON PUBLIC INTEREST

The Public Interest Constituency is the most diverse and hardest to define of the nine constituency groups included in these profiles. We have taken the term public interest literally and included in our list those organizations whose activities seem to be for the benefit of the community at large, or some portion thereof. In Washington, we have identified approximately 90 such organizations ranging from the American Red Cross to Planned Parenthood and the Seattle Jaycees. Although this is by no means an exhaustive list of public interest organizations in the state, we believe that it is a compilation of the most important ones and provides a valuable starting point for reaching public interest groups in the state. This introduction to the Public Interest Constituency in Washington will look at the environmental concerns of the groups in this constituency and how these groups can be reached.

On the basis of their environmental concerns, knowledge, and attitudes towards the EPA, these groups can be divided into two broad categories. First, and by far the majority, are those for whom environmental concerns are at most tangential to their main purposes. Typical of these organizations would be such service groups as the Lions or Jaycees or those which serve a particular constituency, like the American Association of Retired People or the Cascade Bicycle Club. These organizations generally have little specific knowledge about environmental issues or about the EPA and its actions. Typically, they are unable to comment either positively or negatively about EPA. Instead, they express their environmental concerns in very general terms, like "watershed quality", or in relations to their own area of interest as when Planned Parenthood of Spokane listed its environmental concerns as "the effect of population growth on the environment." Usually these groups have had little or no direct contact with the EPA.

The second broad category is composed of organizations whose activities have brought them into contact with the EPA or environmental issues. Although it is hard to precisely differentiate these organizations from those in the first category, they tend to be advocacy groups, such as the Washington Public Interest Research Group, the Citizens for Better Government, or the TRICO Economic Development District. These organizations are much more specific in their environmental concerns and often have definite opinions about EPA and its activities. Wash PIRG, for instance, commented that "(Y)our agency is vitally needed. Make sure political pressures don't stop you from doing your job...Don't let the West become an arid polluted desert." TRICO on the other hand, states that "environmental concerns are extremely important to the district. However, we do not support the unequivocal maintenance of pristine areas within our three counties. This area is one of the poorest in the state and controlled development is necessary."

If EPA intends to reach the members of this constituency group in a more consistent way, it will need to approach the two sub-groups differently. For the large group which is generally unaware of EPA activities, some work will be needed to educate them about basic environmental issues. This outreach could best be focused on helping them understand the connection between EPA's environmental protection efforts and their own primary concerns. Thus, for instance, information efforts could help farmworker groups understand the connection between farmworkers' health and EPA rulings on pesticide use.

Both the advocacy and economic development groups in the second category are much better informed about EPA and its activities. In addition, organizations in this category often have well developed opinions on environmental issues and will be vocal in stating these opinions. Here, EPA can best communicate with them by providing them a chance to be heard and to have their opinions taken into account.

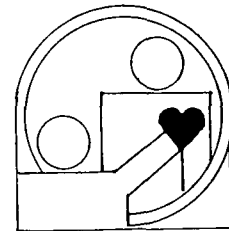

What follows is an alphabetical index of those organizations that responded to our questionnaire. It, in turn, is followed by the profiles themselves.

Organizational
Information

Action Northwest is a nonprofit agency assisted by KING Broadcasting. It has two functions - to provide information, referral, and assistance to the general public and to do story development and background research for TV news and radio public affairs shows. They provide information and referral in 21 categories from Addiction to Welfare. Most of their calls are consumer oriented. They have a two person staff and 40 volunteer workers. They have a branch in Tacoma:

Tacoma Action Northwest
220 Tacoma Ave. S. #1501
Tacoma, WA 98402

Environmental
Concerns

The organization does not take positions on environmental issues. However, it does provide information for the public on the Environment under the headings of Conservation, Pollution, Parks and Recreation, and Streets and Highways. The staff has covered a number of pollution problems in particular the Eurasian Milfoil problem. The person who filled out this questionnaire agreed with action on the Eurasian Milfoil but was disappointed by the length of time the decision took and worries that the solution is not entirely adequate. Action Northwest is also following the asbestos questions and is concerned about formaldehyde fumes that result from glue and insulation. Noise pollution is also a concern as they follow problems of the Lake Union powerboat owners.

Environmental
Concerns

The Committee's prime environmental concerns are about environmental issues that affect treaty/sovereignty rights of Indian tribes in the Northwest. The Committee has occasionally taken positions on environmental issues (it opposes the Northern Tier Pipeline and is concerned about the impact on fisheries of the Northwest Power Bill), but it is not familiar enough with the EPA to comment on EPA actions with which it agreed or disagreed.

Organizational Information	Spokane Legal Services Center is a non-membership corporation. It has a Tri County Office, E. 344 Birch #201, Colville, WA 99114. It provides legal services to low income people.
Environmental Concerns	Legal Services favors any regulation which helps protect the quality of people's lives and the environment in which we live. It has been active in the Washington Water Power electric rate increase hearing by taking a position in behalf of their clients in favor of conservation of electricity and against construction of more expensive coal and nuclear generating facilities.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	None stated.

Name of Organization	TRICO ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT DISTRICT
Address	P.O. Box 214 Colville, WA 99114 (509) 684-4571
Contact Person	Gay Montgomery, Executive Director Tom Bristow, Chairman of the Board
Communication Tools	Overall Economic Development Plan (annual report)
Organizational Information	This agency is in part an economic development corporation, a regional planning agency, and a council of governments for Ferry, Stevens, and Pend Oreille Counties in Northeastern Washington. Its Board of Directors is composed of two county commissioners from each county, 1 Port District Commissioner, 1 PUD commissioner from each county, tribal representatives, 6 mayors or city council representatives, and 6 at large members. They are active at both local and regional levels.
Environmental Concerns	The agency believes that environmental considerations are extremely important, but it does not support the unequivocal maintenance of pristine areas in the three counties. The area is one of the poorest in the state and they believe controlled development is necessary. In the past year they have taken the following positions on environmental issues: 1) opposed the creation of wilderness areas within the district forests; 2) vigorously supported comprehensive planning efforts; and 3) strongly supported the location in the region of industries which meet environmental standards. The District has supported EPA's allowance of variances on teepee burners in the small mills in the area allowing them to continue operations and keep hundreds at work. The District has opposed EPA action which changed the priority rating system on funding of sewer projects which caused several needed projects in the area to be reassigned on the priority list.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Solid Waste, Water Quality, and Drinking Water.

Organizational
Information

Wash PIRG has 8,000 student members who support it with a $2 donation each quarter. It is active at both state and local levels advocating for public interest causes.

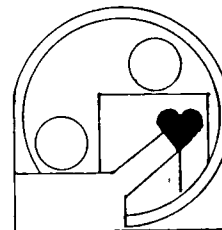

Environmental
Concerns

Wash PIRG has a large number of environmental concerns: nuclear issues, toxic substances, oil in Puget Sound, Power Supply Systems, and safe alternative energy. After completing research, it takes positions on these issues. Some positions have been: problem of Nuclear Waste at Hanford: licensing of nuclear waste sites by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, safeguards in the transportation of nuclear waste, establishing a decommissioning fund by all nuclear utilities; on Solar Energy: for the passage of SHB 388, solar tax credit, solar building codes; better loans for solar houses; Aluminum and Litter: for adjustable contracts, retrofit and recycle. They have agreed with EPA's suit against Hooker Chemical in regards to Love Canal and stopping plasticizers before they were manufactured. It has disagreed with EPA over lack of action in enforcing emission standards and toxic dumps, not taking a strong enough stand to protect the environment from the Northern Tier Pipeline, and for not requiring an Environmental Impact Statement by the Navy for high level nuclear waste pit in Bremerton. Finally, Wash PIRG believes that EPA is vitally needed. It urges EPA not to become an entrenched bureaucracy like OSHA and FTC and to maintain a "fighting spirit" to prevent the West from becoming an air, polluted desert or a New Jersey.

URBAN

WASHINGTON URBAN

Seventy-five percent of Washington's population live in urban areas, while seventy percent of the state's population live in the highly urbanized "Western Corridor", the coastal strip west of the Cascade Mountains. We have identified 250 organizations in these urban areas which are primarily involved in a wide range of activities to develop, maintain, and improve the quality of life in their communities. What follows is an introduction to the Urban Constituency in Washington, its characteristics, and its environmental concerns.

In developing this list of urban organizations, we concentrated on the state's major urban centers (Seattle, Tacoma, and Spokane). Although this misses organizations in the state's smaller urban areas, it provides a comprehensive list of those groups in the major urban centers and could serve as the basis for any expanded list. The groups in this list generally fall into three broad categories. The largest is composed of local citizen activist groups that have been organized to improve the quality of life in a specific geographic area. Examples of these organizations would be the Pioneer Square Association in Seattle or the Wapato Neighborhood Coalition in Tacoma. Second are those organizations that primarily provide services to specific neighborhoods or communities. Neighborhood Centers and the Community Action Agencies (which though sometimes in rural areas provide services to a specific community) are typical of this category. The third and smallest group is composed of organizations that do research on urban problems and provide assistance to city governments.

About 10% of these organizations responded to our questionnaire. Most of them focus their energy on a variety of issues aimed at the maintenance and improvement of an urban neighborhood or other identifiable geographic area. They are usually small in size with about 15 to 100 members, only a portion of whom are actively involved in the organization. Finally, they concentrate their efforts almost exclusively at the neighborhood level and are rarely involved on a broader level, except where state or federal funds may be needed to assure the success of a local project.

These groups indicate that they are quite concerned about the urban environment and often are active in specific land use, development and rehabilitation projects. For the most part, they also indicated general support for environmental protection efforts.

Urban

However, these groups have little specific knowledge of traditional environmental issues and are more concerned about issues which impact their immediate community. Thus the environmental concerns most often expressed by these organizations are such typically urban problems as air quality, noise, mass transit, and bike pathways.

Almost none of these groups reported that they have had any previous contact with EPA or any knowledge of its activities. Thus, it seems that EPA's primary problem in improving communication with these groups is to make them aware of environmental issues outside of their neighborhoods which may impact them, and EPA's role in them.

What follows is an alphabetical index of the organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It in turn is followed by the profiles themselves.

Name of Organization	CASCADE COMMUNITY COUNCIL
Address	224 Minor Avenue N. Seattle, WA 98109 (206) 622-6684
Contact Person	None stated.
Communication Tools	"Cascade Community News" (newsletter)
Organizational Information	Membership in the Council is open to any area resident willing to spend 10 hours a month working towards the goals of the Council. It is active on a local level.
Environmental Concerns	The Council's environmental priorities are to "maintain a human scale in urban areas, protect neighborhoods, conserve affordable housing, promote bicycle and mass transportation, provide recycling business." Its members have taken positions endorsing Citizens for Returnable Beverage Containers, Roof - Fair Rent Campaign, and Demolition Control Ordinance. They believe that "the EPA needs to be able to put some teeth into environmental protection. The profit-oriented organizations are becoming bolder and more aggressive in assaulting even the pathetically minimal protection the public still has, and winning at the expense of the public interest. This nonsense should be nipped right in the bud. Right in the bud. You need to be able to levy some stiff penalties on gross violations of the public interest, with legal sanctions against the violators simply passing the burden on to consumers. Those penalties can come out of the bursting-to-overflowing pockets of the moneygrubbers who make a scandalous amount of money and threaten to utterly wreck our ecosystems."

Environmental
Concerns

The Committee is concerned about dusty streets and sewers. It disagreed with EPA's recommendation of idling and parking bans in downtown Spokane as well as rules requiring accessories and alignment specifications on autos that make them burn more gas, trading one form of pollution for another. It believes "the only way to reduce emissions in downtown Spokane is to make the bus too attractive to pass up. Like:

1. Many satellite parking areas with very frequent bus loops to the business district.
2. More busses on all routes.
3. New bus routes to service areas not now covered -like east-west routes.
4. Eliminate all parking on downtown arterials so traffic can get through quicker.

WOMEN

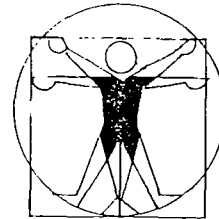

WASHINGTON WOMEN

Of the many organizations in the State of Washington whose membership is composed of women or which focus on women's issues, we have identified about forty of the most prominent groups. This is by no means a complete list of all women's organizations in the state, but it will provide EPA with a starting point for any further communication. This introduction to the Women's Constituency in Washington will look at the various types of women's organizations in the state, their environmental concerns, and the difficulties involved in communicating with them.

Women's organizations tend to fall into three main categories. First, there are those that function primarily as professional associations; second those that are involved in community activities, services, or politics; and third those that have developed in the past ten years from the women's movement and that are concerned with the status of women in society. While the purpose of these organizations may vary, the characteristics of their members tends to be quite similar. They are generally well educated, from middle to upper class backgrounds, and are active members of their communities. Or, as the Tacoma Pierce County Chapter of the League of Women Voters put it in their response to our questionnaire, their members are "intelligent, middle class, activist, persistent."

Despite the diversity of these organizations, they share a common lack of knowledge about EPA and its activities. Of the organizations which responded to our questionnaire, only one could mention a specific EPA action with which it agreed or disagreed. This lack of knowledge about the EPA does not, however, correspond to a lack of interest in the environment or environmental issues. The Spokane League of Women Voters, for instance, stated that "all aspects of the environment, air, water, land use, solid waste, shorelines, etc. are of concern to the League. While the Fremont Women's Clinic listed "preserving the earth, healthy environment for people, concern for people's lives over business and development" as their environmental priorities.

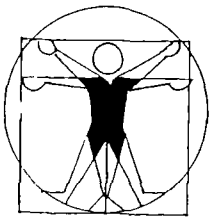

The EPA faces several difficulties in improving communications with this constituency group. First, there is the general lack of knowledge of EPA and its activities which these organizations display. Second, and more importantly, there is the fact that there is no central organization which speaks for or is in contact with all members of this constituency group. While the Washington Women's Commission is in contact with most of the women's rights organizations in the state, it has only limited contact with the many service and professional organizations also in this constituency group. Thus, while EPA may be able to overcome this lack of knowledge that these groups have about it through education and outreach, it will have a much more difficult time reaching all the members of this constituency.

What follows is an index of those organizations in this constituency that responded to our questionnaire. It, in turn, is followed by the profiles themselves.

Organizational
Information

This is one of 23 local leagues in the state of Washington. It has 197 members, mostly women, whose purpose is to promote active and informed participation in the governmental process. They are active on national, regional and local levels. Information about other local chapters can be obtained from:

June Shafer, President, League of Women Voters of Washington,
1406 18th Ave., Seattle, WA 98122 (206) 329-4646

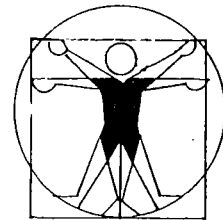

Environmental
Concerns

The Spokane Chapter considers "all aspects of the environment air, water, land use, solid waste, shorelines, etc." to be their concerns along with such other issues as schools, county government, state tax policy, administration of justice, international relations, human resources, etc. Positions the Spokane Chapter has taken on environmental issues include: support of 208 Study results; establishment of a transit area beyond the city limits with assessments extended to those who are served; support for Initiative 61, the bottle bill, in order to reduce waste, save energy and raw materials. They agreed with EPA action to declare the aquifer the sole source of water, but can't remember others off hand.

YOUTH

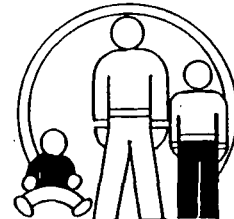

WASHINGTON YOUTH

We have identified 150 Youth Groups in the State of Washington. It should be noted, however, that these groups are run by adults for youth and that, consequently, all the responses we received to our questionnaires were from adult leaders. Thus, the opinions represented here are those of youth leaders and not necessarily those of young people. This introduction to the Youth Constituency in Washington will look at the different types of Youth Organizations, their environmental concerns, and some thoughts on improving communications with them.

The groups we identified are quite varied but can be generally organized into three main categories. First, there are those governmental and private agencies which are primarily concerned with delinquent youth. Second are social service and recreation programs for youth, sometimes with an emphasis on low-income youth. Examples of these are the Boys Scouts, the Campfire Girls, or the Eastside Youth Center of Spokane. Finally, there are family recreation organizations such as the YMCA, YWCA, Salvation Army Youth Centers etc. The number of youth represented by these various organizations is uncertain, but in 1979 the total youth population (under 18) of Washington was estimated at 1.1 million, or 24% of the total population.

The youth groups involved in outdoor recreation (Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, Campfire Girls, etc) are the most active and concerned about environmental issues. Some of these groups indicated that they have been involved in environmental preservation activities in their local areas. Several groups have either periodic or on-going recycling activities, not only for fund-raising, but also (according to the Peninsula Youth Program) because "one of our basic goals with our recycling program is to promote community awareness on...conservation, recycling, and alternative energy." The Northwest Youth Service Bureau has a grant pending for funds to build a solar greenhouse. While the Mt. Rainier Council of the Boy Scouts of America indicated that their members have "helped in Swan Lake enlargement...(and) wrote letter re (the) Federal Way Swamp."

Although none of the groups surveyed was familiar with specific EPA activities, and none had ever been in contact with EPA, this constituency as a whole seems concerned about preservation of the natural environment and is generally supportive of the basic purposes of the EPA. As shown above, a major concern of these organizations is the quality of life for the youth in the state and part of that quality of life is perceived as a quality environment.

The environmental concerns expressed by those groups responding to our questionnaire included, in addition to the activities mentioned above, recreation areas, bike paths, and general quality of life problems (air and water quality, land use problems, etc.). However, these were expressed in vague and general terms and did not include any mention of specific EPA activities.

It is this lack of specific knowledge about EPA and its activities that seems to be the major block to improving communications between EPA and the members of this constituency. Unfortunately, there is no central organization which is in touch with all the youth groups that comprise this constituency. Therefore, EPA is left with the difficult task of reaching these organizations individually. What might perhaps be more feasible would be to concentrate first on those organizations most concerned about the environment rather than to try initially to reach all members of this group.

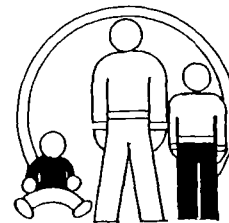

What follows is an alphabetical Index of those organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It, in turn, is followed by the profiles themselves.
