

COMMUNITY WATER SUPPLY STUDY

Bureau of Water Hygiene

FOREWORD

world. are today confronted has been building for many years.

The world is subjected to growing burden of increasing-

A Statement by the Director of the Bureau of Water Hygiene

PREFACE

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

qualified in major sections of the country is more than

Even though wastewater control efforts will be expanded in the future, and are sorely needed to minimize future

pollution of our drinking water sources, it is clear that water pollution control efforts alone cannot assure a safe drinking water quality. It is highly unlikely that even the best conventional waste treatment will produce a in the Analysis of National Survey Findings, and in the nine against the Public Health Service Drinking Water Standards of constructed over 20 years ago. Since they were built, the populations that many of them serve have increased rapidly -- distribution system capacity. Many systems are already

During this survey showed coliform bacterial contamination

* Apply available water treatment and distribution technology, more intensively.

