U.S. EPA Region V

Environmental Hotline '81 is a directory of more than 600 private groups and public agencies that are dedicated to protecting the Nation's environment through ongoing, active programs. The directory has been prepared by the Office of Public Information of Region V, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, as part of its mission to inform the public about the state of the environment as well as EPA's efforts to enforce the Federal laws that protect human health and the environment from pollution. Listings cover the six States of Region V — Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, and Wisconsin.

We have completely revamped and have made every effort to correct and to expand this edition of the Hotline so that it can be of more use to those who receive it.

Your comments and suggestions are welcome, as will be your help in keeping this directory complete and up to date for its next edition. A form is provided at the back of the book for changes, additions, or requested deletions from future Hotlines.

A table of contents, with general instructions for simplest use of the directory, appears on page 2.

U.S. EPA Region V, Office of Public Information
Kathy Brown, Director
Susan Nelson, Editor
Researchers: Lydia Webster, Jon Ziomek, Alan Cohen

Region V's Office of Public Information also publishes Environment Midwest, a free monthly magazine, and makes available other materials including brochures and films about the environment. The office also operates a speakers' bureau. For more information call (312) 353-2072.

How To Use This Book

We have divided Environmental Hotline '81 into two basic categories: Federal and Regional government agencies and citizens' groups that are concerned about the environment, and State-by-State listings of those categories and others, including libraries. Information for the next edition of the Hotline and 24-hour emergency numbers are found at the back of the book.

In general, to report a more routine complaint about pollution, the place to begin is your local pollution-control agency. These local units may handle the complaint themselves or refer you to your State environmental agency. The State agency may, in turn, notify the U.S. EPA if it needs assistance in resolving the pollution problem. Region V's new toll-free Environmental Hotline, listed on preceding page, is open for reporting suspected hazardous waste problems as well as for general information.

If an immediate health hazard exists from a pollution problem, accident, or spill in your area, call the State's environmental emergency number or the national Emergency Response Center. Both numbers are listed at the bottom of this page as well as on the inside back cover.

If you have a more routine complaint or question about pollution, the place to begin is your local pollution-control agency, such as your town's or city's environmental-control department. Or try the county: Some of Illinois' 102 counties have pollution-control agencies. Yours may be among them. Local agencies may resolve the complaint themselves, or they may refer you to the appropriate State agency, which you may contact directly.

A number of State agencies are responsible for the environment in Illinois. The Illinois Environmental Protection Agency (I-EPA) is charged with surveillance for and implementation and enforcement of State and Federal environmental laws on air quality, land (including landfills), noise, water quality, and public drinking supplies. The main I-EPA offices are in Springfield. I-EPA also has a network of regional and district offices throughout the State, which specialize in different aspects of the environment and report to headquarters in Springfield.

If you have a question about the environment in Illinois, need to know where to take a specific complaint, or wish to receive printed materials about environmental matters, including the free monthly newsletter Illinois Environmental Progress, contact:

Illinois Environmental Protection Agency
Public Affairs Office
2200 Churchill Rd.
Springfield, IL 62706
(217)782-5562

Two other agencies work in conjunction with the I-EPA. The Illinois Institute of Natural Resources (INR) is responsible for conducting research and State environmental impact studies. INR maintains three offices:

309 W. Washington St.	325 W. Adams St.	Natural Resources Bldg.
Chicago, IL 60606	Springfield, IL 62706	Urbana, IL 61801
(312)793-3870	(217)785-3411	(217)344-1481

The five-person, governor-appointed Illinois Pollution Control Board (IPCB) hears enforcement cases. On the recommendation of I-EPA, these cases are filed through the Office of the Illinois Attorney General, which then files with the IPCB. The IPCB also publishes a free weekly newsletter, The Environmental Register, which lists all hearings and proposed rules and regulations on environmental matters in Illinois. Contact:

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

- (A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
(T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
(W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the 143 colleges and universities in Illinois have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list the University of Illinois, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Illinois' Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

INDIANA

If an immediate health hazard exists from a pollution problem, accident, or spill in your area, call the State's environmental emergency number or the national Emergency Response Center. Both numbers are listed at the bottom of this page as well as on the inside back cover.

If you have a more routine complaint or question about pollution, the place to begin is your local health department. Indiana has some 90 health jurisdictions, some made up of cities, some of the State's 92 counties, and some that combine cities and counties. Local agencies may resolve the complaint themselves, or they may refer you to the appropriate State agency, which you may contact directly.

The Indiana State Board of Health (ISBH) is responsible for protecting the health and well-being of residents of Indiana. In this capacity it is also responsible for the administration and technical and staff support of the State's three environmental boards, whose members are appointed by the Governor.

If you have a question about the environment as it relates to health in Indiana, need to know where to take a specific complaint, or wish to receive printed materials about environmental matters, including the free newsletter, Indiana Environmental Health Action, contact:

Indiana State Board of Health
Public Information Office
1330 W. Michigan St.
Indianapolis, IN 46206
(317)633-0260

The State's Environmental Management Board functions as an umbrella above two other boards, reviewing all actions of these two groups.

Environmental Management Board
1330 W. Michigan St.
Indianapolis, IN 46206
(317)633-8404

The Indiana Stream Pollution Control Board is responsible for implementation and enforcement of State and Federal water quality and land use laws. The Air Pollution Control Board is its counterpart for air quality.

Indiana Stream Pollution Control Board
1330 W. Michigan St.
Indianapolis, IN 46206
(317)633-0167

Indiana Air Pollution Control Board
1330 W. Michigan St.
Indianapolis, IN 46206
(317)633-8404

Both of these boards turn to ISBH with environmental problems. ISBH conducts studies and research as indicated and reports back to either pollution-control board with its findings and recommendations. The appropriate board then suggests what it considers appropriate action to the Environmental Management Board. (For hazardous waste problems, ISBH reports directly to the EMB.)

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

- (A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
- (T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
- (W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the 47 colleges and universities in Indiana have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list Purdue University, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Indiana's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

MICHIGAN

If an immediate health hazard exists from a pollution problem, accident, or spill in your area, call the State's Pollution Emergency Alert System (PEAS) toll-free number or the national Emergency Response Center. Both numbers are listed at the bottom of this page as well as on the inside back cover.

If you have a more routine complaint or question about pollution, the place to begin is your local health department. All of Michigan's 83 counties are covered. Local agencies may resolve the complaint themselves, or they may refer you to the appropriate State agency, which you may contact directly.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR) is the main agency responsible for the environment in Michigan. DNR is charged with surveillance and monitoring for, and implementation and enforcement of, State and Federal laws on air, land, noise, water, solid wastes/resource recovery, toxic substances control, and monitoring of pesticides. Additionally the DNR is responsible for fisheries and wildlife, State parks and forests, land management, and the State geological survey. The main DNR offices are in Lansing. DNR also has a network of regional and district offices throughout the State, which specialize in different aspects of the environment and report to headquarters in Lansing.

If you have a question about the environment in Michigan, need to know where to take a specific complaint, or wish to receive printed materials about environmental matters, contact:

Michigan Department of Natural Resources
Information and Education Division
P.O. Box 30028
Lansing, MI 48909
(517)373-1220

The Michigan Environmental Review Board, whose members represent different units of State government and are appointed by the governor, is charged with reviewing environmental projects of major significance:

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under "government" listings.

- (A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
(T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
(W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the 91 colleges and universities in Michigan have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list Michigan State University, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Michigan's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

We also list the University of Michigan, which also plays a major role in environmental studies, because it is affiliated with the U.S. Department of Commerce's State Sea Grant Program. In the Great Lakes region, these programs concentrate on water safety, fisheries, toxic substances, and wetland resources. Each includes advisory agents for public education and information.

MINNESOTA

If an immediate health hazard exists from a pollution problem, accident, or spill in your area, call the State's environmental emergency number or the national Emergency Response Center. Both numbers are listed at the bottom of this page as well as on the inside back cover.

If you have a more routine complaint or question about pollution, the place to begin is your local pollution-control agency, such as your town's or city's environmental-control department. Or try the county: Some of Minnesota's 87 counties have pollution-control agencies. Local agencies may resolve the complaint themselves, or they may refer you to the appropriate State agency, which you may contact directly.

The Minnesota Pollution Control Agency (MPCA) is the main agency responsible for the environment in Minnesota. It is charged with surveillance and monitoring for and implementation and enforcement of State and Federal environmental laws on air quality, water quality, and solid waste/land pollution. The main MPCA offices are in Roseville. If you have a question about the environment in Minnesota, need to know where to take a specific complaint, or wish to receive printed materials about environmental matters, including the free bimonthly newsletter, Minnesota Environment, contact:

Minnesota Pollution Control Agency
Public Information Office
1935 W. County Rd. B-2
Roseville, MN 55113
(612)296-7373

MPCA also has a network of five regional offices, which provide regional response to pollution problems:

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

- (A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
- (T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
- (W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the 59 colleges and universities in Minnesota have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list the University of Minnesota, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Minnesota's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

We also list it as an affiliate of the U.S. Department of Commerce's State Sea Grant Program. In the Great Lakes region, these programs concentrate on water safety, fisheries, toxic substances, and wetland resources. Each includes advisory agents for public education and information.

OHIO

If an immediate health hazard exists from a pollution problem, accident, or spill in your area, call the State's environmental emergency number or the national Emergency Response Center. Both numbers are listed at the bottom of this page as well as on the inside back cover.

If you have a more routine complaint or question about pollution, the place to begin is your local pollution-control agency, such as your town's or city's environmental-control department. Or try the county: Some of Ohio's 88 counties have pollution-control agencies. Local agencies may resolve the complaint themselves, or they may refer you to the appropriate State agency, which you may contact directly.

The Ohio Environmental Protection Agency (O-EPA) is the main agency responsible for the environment in Ohio. It is charged with surveillance and monitoring for, and implementation and enforcement of, State and Federal environmental laws on air, water, solid and hazardous wastes and public water supplies.

The main O-EPA offices are in Columbus. If you have a question about the environment in Ohio, need to know where to take a specific complaint, or wish to receive printed materials about environmental matters, including the free bimonthly newsletter, Environment Ohio, contact:

Ohio Environmental Protection Agency
Public Interest Center
361 E. Broad St.
Columbus, OH 43216
(614)466-8508
Toll-Free: 1-800-282-0270 (within Ohio only)

O-EPA also has a network of five district offices, which provide regional response to pollution problems. People are encouraged to contact their nearest district office:

Northeast District
2110 E. Aurora Rd.
Twinsburg 44087
(216)425-9171

Central District
2244-46 S. Hamilton Rd.
Columbus 43227
(614)466-6450

Northwest District
1035 Devlac Grove Dr.
Bowling Green 43402

(614)385-8501

Southwest District
7 E. Fourth St.
Dayton 45402
(513)461-4680

The Ohio Environmental Board of Review, a three-member board appointed by the governor, reviews decisions of O-EPA that are appealed by an entity or a private citizen.

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

- (A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
- (T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
- (W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the 105 colleges and universities in Ohio have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list the Ohio State University which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Ohio's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

We also list it as an affiliate of the U.S. Department of Commerce's State Sea Grant Program. In the Great Lakes region, these programs concentrate on water safety, fisheries, toxic substances, and wetland resources. Each includes advisory agents for public education and information.

WISCONSIN

If an immediate health hazard exists from a pollution problem, accident, or spill in your area, call the State's environmental emergency number or the national Emergency Response Center. Both numbers are listed at the bottom of this page as well as on the inside back cover.

If you have a more routine complaint or question about pollution, the place to begin is your local pollution-control agency, such as your town's or city's environmental-control department. Or try the county: Some of Wisconsin's 72 counties have pollution-control agencies. Yours may be among them. Local agencies may resolve the complaint themselves, or they may refer you to the appropriate State agency, which you may contact directly.

The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources (DNR) is the main agency responsible for the environment in Wisconsin. DNR is charged with surveillance and monitoring for, and implementation and enforcement of, State and Federal laws on air, land, noise, water, solid wastes/resource recovery, toxic substances control, and monitoring of pesticides. Additionally the DNR is responsible for fisheries and wildlife, State parks and forests, and land management. The main DNR offices are in Madison. If you have a question about the environment in Wisconsin, need to know where to take a specific complaint, or wish to receive printed materials about environmental matters, including free newsletters on air, sewage treatment, or solid waste, contact:

Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources
Bureau of Information and Education
P.O. Box 7921
Madison, WI 53707
(608)266-2621

DNR also has a network of six district offices, which provide regional response to pollution problems. People are encouraged to contact their nearest district office:

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

- (A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
- (T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
- (W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/ Universities

Most of the 58 colleges and universities in Wisconsin have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list the University of Wisconsin, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Wisconsin's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

We also list it as an affiliate of the U.S. Department of Commerce's State Sea Grant Program. In the Great Lakes region, these programs concentrate on water safety, fisheries, toxic substances, and wetland resources. Each include advisory agents for public education and information.
