U.S. EPA ORGANIZATIONAL OVERVIEW – REGION 10

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency: EPA and the Pacific Northwest

The Agency's Mission

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency was established December 2, 1970, to consolidate a number of federal environmental activities into a single agency. The agency's broad mission is to preserve and improve the quality of the environment, and to protect human health from environmental threats.

EPA Region 10

The Pacific Northwest states of Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington comprise EPA Region 10, one of ten regions in the United States. The Regional Office in Seattle, Washington, relies on operations offices in each of the four states to provide readily available liaison with state counterparts. The Region works closely with state governments to delegate responsibilities for carrying out environmental programs.

Region 10 Organization

The Region's highly trained work force consists of approximately seven hundred administrative, clerical, engineering, legal, scientific, and technical employees working in five divisions. Management supports the Region with policy planning, accounting, facilities, and equipment. Environmental Services provides technical and scientific support, including laboratory analysis, to EPA programs. The remaining three divisions, Water, Air and Toxics, and Hazardous Waste, carry out specific programs to implement environmental laws.

Environmental Laws

Major laws passed by Congress authorize EPA to protect the environment:

The Clean Air Act directs EPA to establish air quality standards for specific pollutants and emission standards for hazardous air pollutants. States with delegated authority are required to develop and enforce State Implementation Plans (SIPs) to achieve compliance with national air quality standards.

The Clean Water Act seeks to restore and maintain the quality of the nation's waterways. States with delegated authority are required to develop and implement water quality standards.

The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (Superfund) authorizes EPA to address uncontrolled hazardous waste sites and respond to emergency situations. Although Superfund is not delegated to the states, they play a major role in the identification and clean-up of hazardous waste sites.

The Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act requires emergency planning and notification, and expands the rights of citizens to obtain information about the presence and release of hazardous chemicals.

The Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act makes EPA responsible for registering specified uses of pesticide products.

The Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act requires EPA to protect the oceans from indiscriminate dumping.

The National Environmental Education Act established an Advisory Council and Federal Task Force to promote environmental education training programs, grant programs, internships, fellowships, and national awards programs.

The Pesticide Amendment to the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act requires EPA to establish tolerance levels for pesticide residues on feed crops and raw and processed foods.

The Pollution Prevention Act makes it a priority to reduce or prevent pollution at the source.

The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act authorizes EPA and delegated states to regulate waste management and disposal practices, and encourage states to develop comprehensive management plans for non-hazardous solid waste.

The Safe Drinking Water Act directs EPA to establish national drinking water standards. States with delegated authority are primarily responsible for enforcement.

The Toxic Substances Control Act requires identification and control of chemicals that pose an unreasonable risk to human health or the environment through their manufacture, processing, commercial distribution, use, or disposal.

Region 10's Strategic Direction

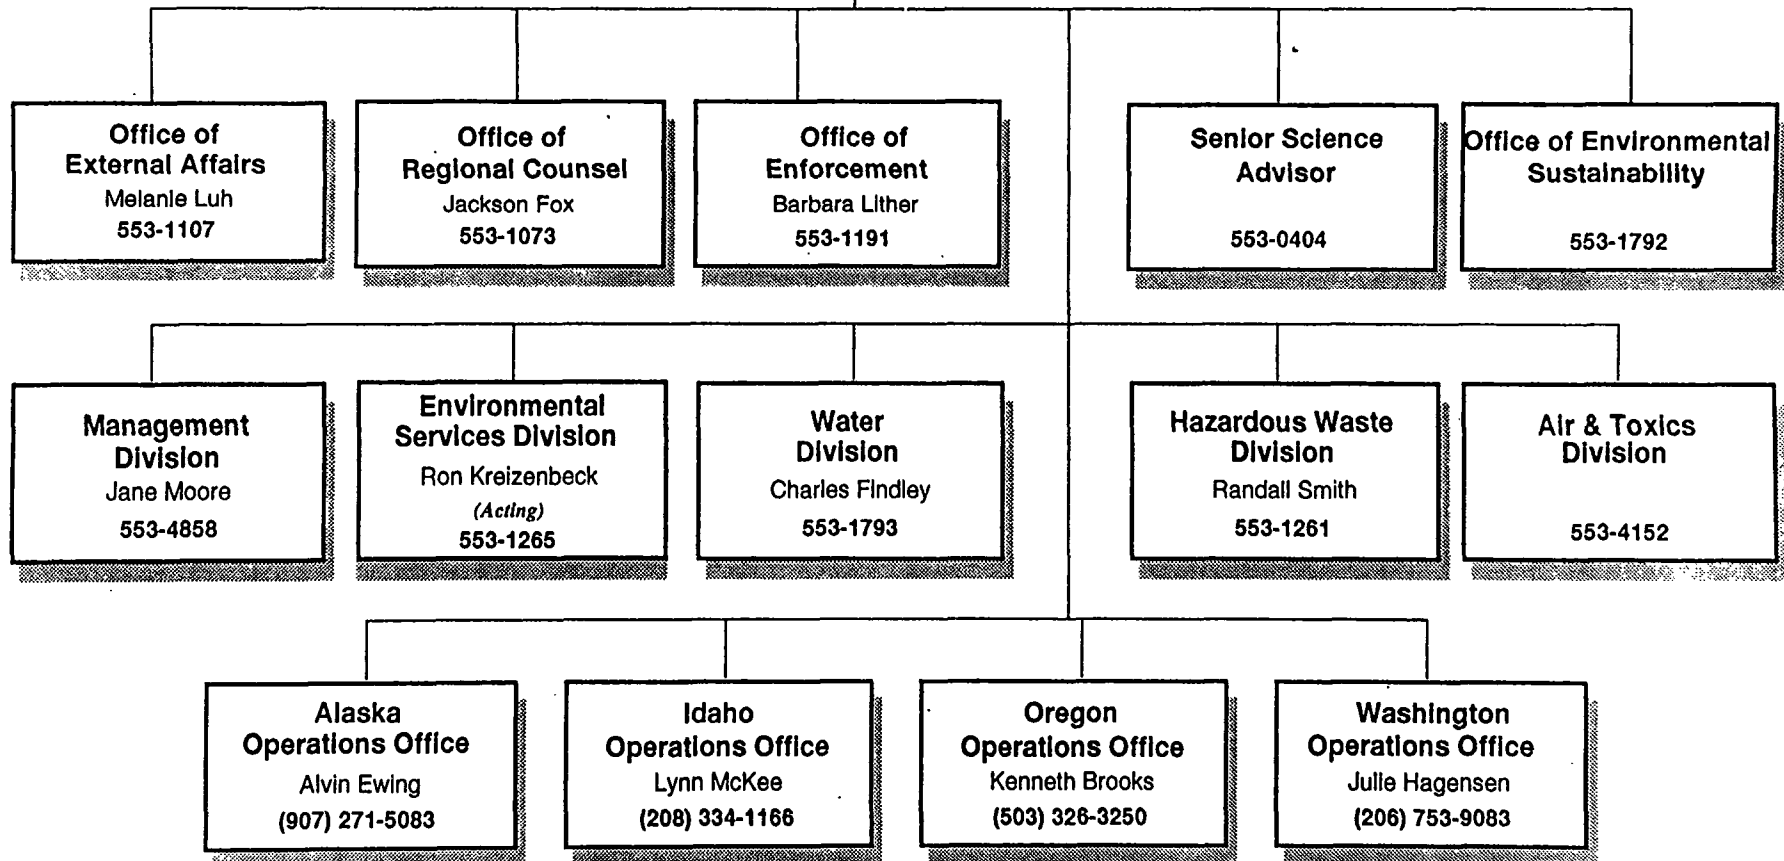

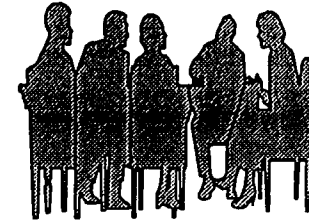

The Region has chosen five "strategic directions" to help protect and enhance the environment:

- 1. Environmental Outreach and Education focuses on expanding environmental knowledge and communications between regulatory partners and the public in Region 10.
- 2. Pollution Prevention focuses on preventing pollution rather than cleaning up polluted sites.
- 3. Enforcement and Compliance focuses on examining Region 10's enforcement and compliance activities, and determining what techniques improve compliance.
- 4. Geographic/Multi-Media Leadership focuses on establishing and using integrated environmental problem-solving as a means to protect and enhance the environment. Environmental problems will be solved by addressing a geographic area, such as a watershed or a population center, or by addressing all environmental media at a facility. Environmental threats will be resolved, rather than moved to a different geographic area or medium.
- 5. "Wholesale/Retail Concept" is Region 10's characterization of the agency's appropriate role for regulating environmental programs in the Region. EPA's role can be either direct leadership as a "retailer" or indirect leadership as a "wholesaler." As a retailer, there would be strong capability at the federal level and less substantial programs at the state level. Region 10 prefers to be a wholesaler, utilizing principles of business excellence to streamline processes, providing strong technical and financial support to state and local governments and relating to state agencies as partners. In this role, it is Region 10's responsibility to find ways to make the state and local governments successful as environmental regulators.
