Background Data:

The Coeur d'Alene Reservation was established by Executive Orders in 1867 and 1873. The enrolled membership totals 1,231. The reservation land base of 345,000 acres is 55% forested, 28% agricultural, 10% rangeland and 7% public & transportation uses. The land base is within the counties of Benewah and Kootenai. Only 20% of the land base is Indian controlled, including 5,700 acres in the tribal farm and 25,000 acres of tribal forest. They have an excellent land program by which they are gradually restoring their lost reservation.

Lake Coeur d'Alene and the St. Joe River are both within the boundaries of the reservation, as are Chatcolet, Round, Hidden and Benewah Lakes.

The reservation provides habitat for white-tailed deer, elk, and black bear, as well as waterfowl, field birds and small mammals. The St. Joe is important for cut-throat, rainbow, brook trout and kokanee.

Lake Coeur d'Alene is one of the area's most important resources, providing economic opportunity for tourism-recreation as well as valuable amenities for industry and commerce. Forest, range, and agricultural lands form a base for diverse economic activities. Minerals, primarily clay and basalt, represent an untapped potential.

The climate is marked by warm, dry summers with cool morning and evenings. The growing season is about 125 days. Average precipitation varies from 21 to 23 inches west to east, and is sufficient to support dry-land cropping of small grains and lentils.

The Coeur d'Alene Tribe is governed by a 7 members Tribal Council, elected for 3 year terms that have all governing powers[2].

Background Data:

In 1855 Governor Stevens met with the Kootenai tribe at Hellgate in Montana over the proposal to cede all aboriginal land in exchange for a Reservation as the white man found gold on their lands. The tribe refused to sign the treaty, as it was against their Covenant with the creator. After many years of being herded around, in 1892 Major Ronan allotted the original land in trust to the remaining members. These lands were told to be farmed with help from the Government. The promised help in establishing the farms never came, and the Government made the original allotments smaller since they were not all being used for farming. In 1928 the Secretary of the Interior sold most of the Indian allotments to pay for the diking of the river that created richer farmlands.

In 1960 the Kootenai's filed a claim for the loss of their aboriginal territories and were awarded $425,000.00. This money did not benefit the tribe as the BIA used it not to buy back land, but to fix up the mission and to pay for the State social assistance used. Their condition was hopeless, programs were not available because there was no reservation, so the Kootenai's declared war on the United States of America on September 20, 1974. That same year, President Ford signed a bill creating a Reservation with a land base of 12.5 acres as well as establishing houses and needed programs. The Indian Self Determination Act of 1976 gave the tribes the power to contract the programs that BIA had always administered and things began to improve.

The Kootenai Tribe of Idaho is one of the seven member bands of the Kootenai Nation. Located on the Kootenai River 30 miles south of the Canadian Border in the Northernmost county of Boundary, Idaho. They are located a few miles out of Bonners Ferry, Idaho. Most of the trust land belonging to the Tribe and its 125 enrolled members lies on the wide valley floor of the river. Under existing Treaty Rights the tribe has water rights to protect and the authority to manage & set water quality standards for the Kootenai River.

The tribe has a Constitution and By-laws duly ratified in 1947. The Kootenai Tribes are governed by a four member council who are elected for three year terms, positions on council can be rotated yearly if they so choose[3].

Background Data:

The Nez Perce Indians (Nay Per Say), commonly called the "Nez Purse", were named by the Lewis and Clark Expeditions when they befriended our people in 1805. In French this means "Pierced Nose". Why this was the name given to the Tribe by the explorers is puzzling, for the Tribe did not pierce their noses as a general Tribal custom or practice.

Before the Lewis and Clark expedition, the Nez Perce were identified as the Ni Mii Pu ("The People") or the Tsoop-Nit-Pa-Loo ("The Walking Out People"). In 1805, our tribal membership was estimated to number about 7,000. Diseases which explorers introduced to the tribe, reduced the tribal population dramatically. Nevertheless, we have survived contact with the European culture and have compiled and recorded books and tapes in an effort to protect and preserve both our history and culture

Both the men and women of the Nez Perce Tribe were brave in war whenever they were forced to take up arms against either other tribes or the white man. However, the Tribe has always had a reputation for maintaining peaceable relations with the whites since their first contact. In 1855, Governor Isaac I Stevens concluded a treaty with the Nez Perce recognizing our rights to an immense tract of country for our reservation, consisting of some 7 5 million acres Originally, this land was closed to all white man However, encroachments by the whites motivated by the discovery of gold caused this treaty to be re-negotiated, resulting in the Treaty of 1863 which reduced the reservation to approximately 87,500 acres in the Counties of Nez Perce, Clearwater, Idaho, and Lewis This treaty was referred to as the "Steal Treaty" which created conflict among our people. Families and friends were divided Those who would not agree to the new treaty were call non-treaty Indians Certain factions of the Tribe took evasive action in an effort to resist locating onto the new Reservation This historic episode known as the "Nez Perce War of 1877" was led by such notable Nez Perce Leaders as Chief Joseph, Five Wounds, Yellow Bull, Yellow Wolf, Lookingglass and Rainbow

Today, there are 15 communities located within the boundaries of the reservation 1986 population estimates about 11,400 within the incorporated communities Another 5,000 to 6,000 people live in the rural areas. Tribal enrollment is approximately 3,200 members, with 1,000 members living off the reservation The Nez Perce Tribe proudly strives to develop economic growth and stability to insure that the economic viability and cultural history of the Tribe remain intact.

The tribe operates under a constitution that was approved in 1958, allowing for a nine-member tribal executive committee, elected for three years The council positions rotate yearly. The Nez Perce Tribal Executive Committee has all governing powers[4]

Background Data:

The Fort Hall Indian Reservation was established by the Fort Bridger Treaty of 1868. The Reserve is situated in SE Idaho and consists of 543,900 acres in the Counties of Bannock, Power, and Caribou. 96% of the Reservation land is owned by individual Indians and the Tribe.

Fort Hall is the Homeland today for 3,413 enrolled Shoshone-Bannocks. The two were different tribes with two different languages. They traveled in small groups and mixed with each other on hunting trips. They eventually intermarried and over the years became known as the Shoshone-Bannock Tribe.

Most of the income for this tribe comes from the phosphate mines on the reservation. The mining corporations are Simplot and FMC. This changed in June 1993, the mines closed. A tax commission has been formed to develop a taxation policy. If this becomes reality, the tribe will be able to support their own schools, road, etc. The main income now is agricultural resources.

This tribe is famous for their arts and crafts, including beadwork and tanned hides. They are considered to be the best craftsmen in the US and Europe.

The Shoshone-Bannock enrolled members elect seven council members to sit on the Fort Hall Business Council, which was formed to establish organization, promote Shoshone-Bannock welfare, conserve and develop lands and resources, and exercise self-government. The council positions can be rotated yearly, but voting is every two years[2]

Background Data:

The current Tribal members of the Burns Paiute Reservation are primarily the descendants of the "Wada Tika" band of Paiute Indians that roamed in central and southern Oregon. As increased numbers of non-Indians came into the Harney Valley where the tribe gathered roots bulbs and plants to eat, anxiety arose about their land and safety. On September 12, 1872, President Grant, by Executive Order, established the Malheur Reservation at 1.8 million acres. Pressure brought by settlers to increase the grazing for their cattle resulted in boundary changes enacted between 1872 and 1876. In addition, the discovery of gold in the northern portion of the reservation resulted in additional boundary changes.

Increasing tension arose in the Indians' relations with Reservation life and the white people. This dissension made it easy for the Paiutes to join the Bannocks when they requested their help in ridding the land of whites and returning life to normal for the Indians. Although many Indians did not participate in the war against the whites, they were not spared from its effect. When a Paiute leader was killed, the war ended early with the leaders surrendering in the winter of 1879.

Although the Bannocks started the war, the Paiutes suffered the most. They were rounded up like cattle and moved to Fort Harney. On December 5, 1879, 500 Paiute Indians were force marched to Fort Simcoe, Washington. This journey killed many surviving members of the "Wada Tika". Many years were spent in Yakima, where the harsh treatment by the Yakima Indians caused many to escape to their homeland in the Harney Valley. In 1887, the Paiutes were asked if they wanted to reclaim their reservation in Harney County, that was currently public domain.

Under the 1887 Allotment Act, the remaining 115 Paiute heads of household were allotted 160 acres. The land that they were given to live on and grow their food was alkaline, covered in greasewood and sagebrush, and lacked water. Subsistence became difficult.

In 1935, the Federal Government purchased 771 acres from the Brown Land and Title to be held in trust for the Paiute Indians by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The school and homes that were located on "Old Camp", an area donated to the Paiutes in 1925, moved to "New Village". The Tribe also adopted the Indian Reorganization Act and established a Business Committee of 5 members the would meet on issues concerning the Tribe.

Times were difficult for the Paiutes, it was not until 1948 the Indian children began to attend public schools. In an attempt to improve the living standards of the Indians, several were sent to large cities as part of the Relocation Act of 1950. They were sent to learn job skills but those at home still did not have electricity or plumbing in their homes.

In the early 1960's, the tribe began working to secure their legal status and title to their lands. They leased the uninhabited portion of the reservation to local ranchers and used the income to pay the government its cost of original purchase plus interest. In 1968 with the adoption to the tribal constitution and Bylaws, the Tribe gained full recognition by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In addition, on October 13, 1972 the Burns Paiute Tribe acquired title to the 771 acres as their reservation. This was only a fraction of the land they used to inhabit, but at least it was home for many descendants. The tribe owns 11,786 acres of land in Harney county for its 345 enrolled tribal members.

On February 19, 1988, the Burns Paiute Tribe adopted a new Tribal Constitution and in August 1988 elected the first seven member Tribal Council. The tribal council is currently working on goals that include more new housing, improvement of agriculture lands, and diversification of the economic base to enable Members to live and work on the Reservation[5]

Narrative
The purpose of this survey was to locate and monument that parcel described per MF#91-04-0879, Coos County Deed Records. Said parcel corners were established from found monuments and record information. There was some concern that the 1985 BLM survey did not agree with other record surveys for the north line of Wallace Avenue. The reason for this is that the BLM survey is based on a Solar Observation and the other surveys are based on the Lambert Grid - Oregon South Zone. These differ by approximately 2 1/2 degrees. When the surveys were tied together, the monuments from all surveys checked very well. Equipment used in the survey was a Wild TCI010 total station theodolite. Assisting in the survey were Mark Gahrke, Scott Field, and Tony Benthin.

Background Data:

It all began with a well-developed and marine oriented culture on the southern Oregon coast. The tribes led a peaceful existence until the invasion of settlers. The Oregon Territorial Treaty with Great Britain of 1846 recognized the Indians title to the land and did not allow settlers to use the land until it is ceded to the United States by treaty. On August 17, 1855 38 members of the Coos, Lower Umpqua and Siuslaw Indian Tribes signed a treaty ceding all of their land in exchange for food, clothing, employment, education and health benefits, however it was not ratified. In 1856, the three tribes relocated at Umpqua City at the mouth of the Umpqua River until 1859 when they were moved eighty miles northward to the Yachats River. In 1917, the tribes began legal action for compensation of illegally taken tribal lands, paid on a donation basis. In 1938, the case was acted on in which the Coos, Lower Umpqua, and Siuslaw were parties to the Siletz Allotment agreement on the Siletz Reservation in 1892. Documentation of the treaty signing was not available and the tribes had no records of their existence. In that same year, 6.1 acres of land in Coos County was donated to the tribes and is currently in trust, and in May of 1939 the government began construction on a meeting hall and caretaker's house for the 337 enrolled members of the tribe.

The tribes are governed by a Tribal Council, that are active in local and state-wide affairs. Although the Council is hoping for reinstatement, the tribe has become federally recognized on October 17, 1984[6]

Background Data:

Along the southern Oregon Coast, Coos Bay makes the land approachable to sea-farers. Thus it became an attractive port to Europeans and their descendants in the 1850's when gold and coal was realized and the Land Donation Act of 1850 was in effect. Due to the non-Indian invasion, in the mid-1850's the Coquilles ceded their lands to the government and many of the people were taken to reservations. During the time that the Coquilles were away from their homeland, towns and communities emerged along the southern Oregon coast. In the reservations, many starved or died of disease. Many of the surviving Coquilles returned to their homeland, although now there were towns, mines, and farms where their village used to lie. A congressional action is proposed to take place that will convert 942 acres of its 1,126.92 acres total acreage to trust status in the Coos Bay and Empire area. This congressional action will also establish a north and south reservation to house tribal members in the Empire area of Coos County. Currently, as of July 29 1994, the Empire area does not house any of the 660 enrolled tribal members and only contains logging roads, and some slash burning activity. The Tupper Rock site (4.5 acres) in Bandon is already in trust status. In the current service area of Coos, Curry, Douglas, Jackson, and Lane Counties there are 331 Coquille residents[7].

Background Data:

The Cow Creek Band of Umpqua Tribe of Indians became one of the first two treaty tribes in the Pacific Northwest with a ratified treaty on April 12, 1854. In spite of official recognition by the federal government with the ratification of the treaty, the tribe was never awarded the permanent reservation promised and was not granted the various rights and benefits guaranteed by the treaty.

The treaty was negotiated on an area approximately 1,200 square miles, however, traditional use areas encompassed areas of Douglas, Coos, Jackson, Josephine, Deschutes, Klamath, and Lane Counties. The tribe's usage of this area included hunting and fishing, as well as traveling great distances on the trade routes. Trade routes in every direction were utilized for fur trading.

For nearly a century after the treaty was signed, the tribe was ignored by the federal government, however, in 1956 Congress passed the Indian Termination Act which terminated federal relations with some 60 tribes and bands in western Oregon. The Cow Creek Tribe received no notification of this action, but were included in the termination act.

The Cow Creek received no prior notification of the Termination Act, and because of that were able to obtain presidential action in 1980 to take a land claims case to the U.S. Court of Claims. On December 29, 1982, nearly 125 years after the treaty was signed, P.L. 97-391 was passed by Congress and the tribe regained recognition by the federal government. The total reservation acreage owned by the Tribe is 46 and is within the county of Douglas.

The Tribe has contracted with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service, programs such as Adult Vocational Training, Higher Education, Social Services, Housing Improvement and various health programs to benefit tribal people[14].

Background Data:

The Klamath tribe became federally recognized in August of 1986 and converted approximately 350 acres to trust status. The tribe retains its fishing, hunting, and wildlife rights for its 2,600 enrolled members.

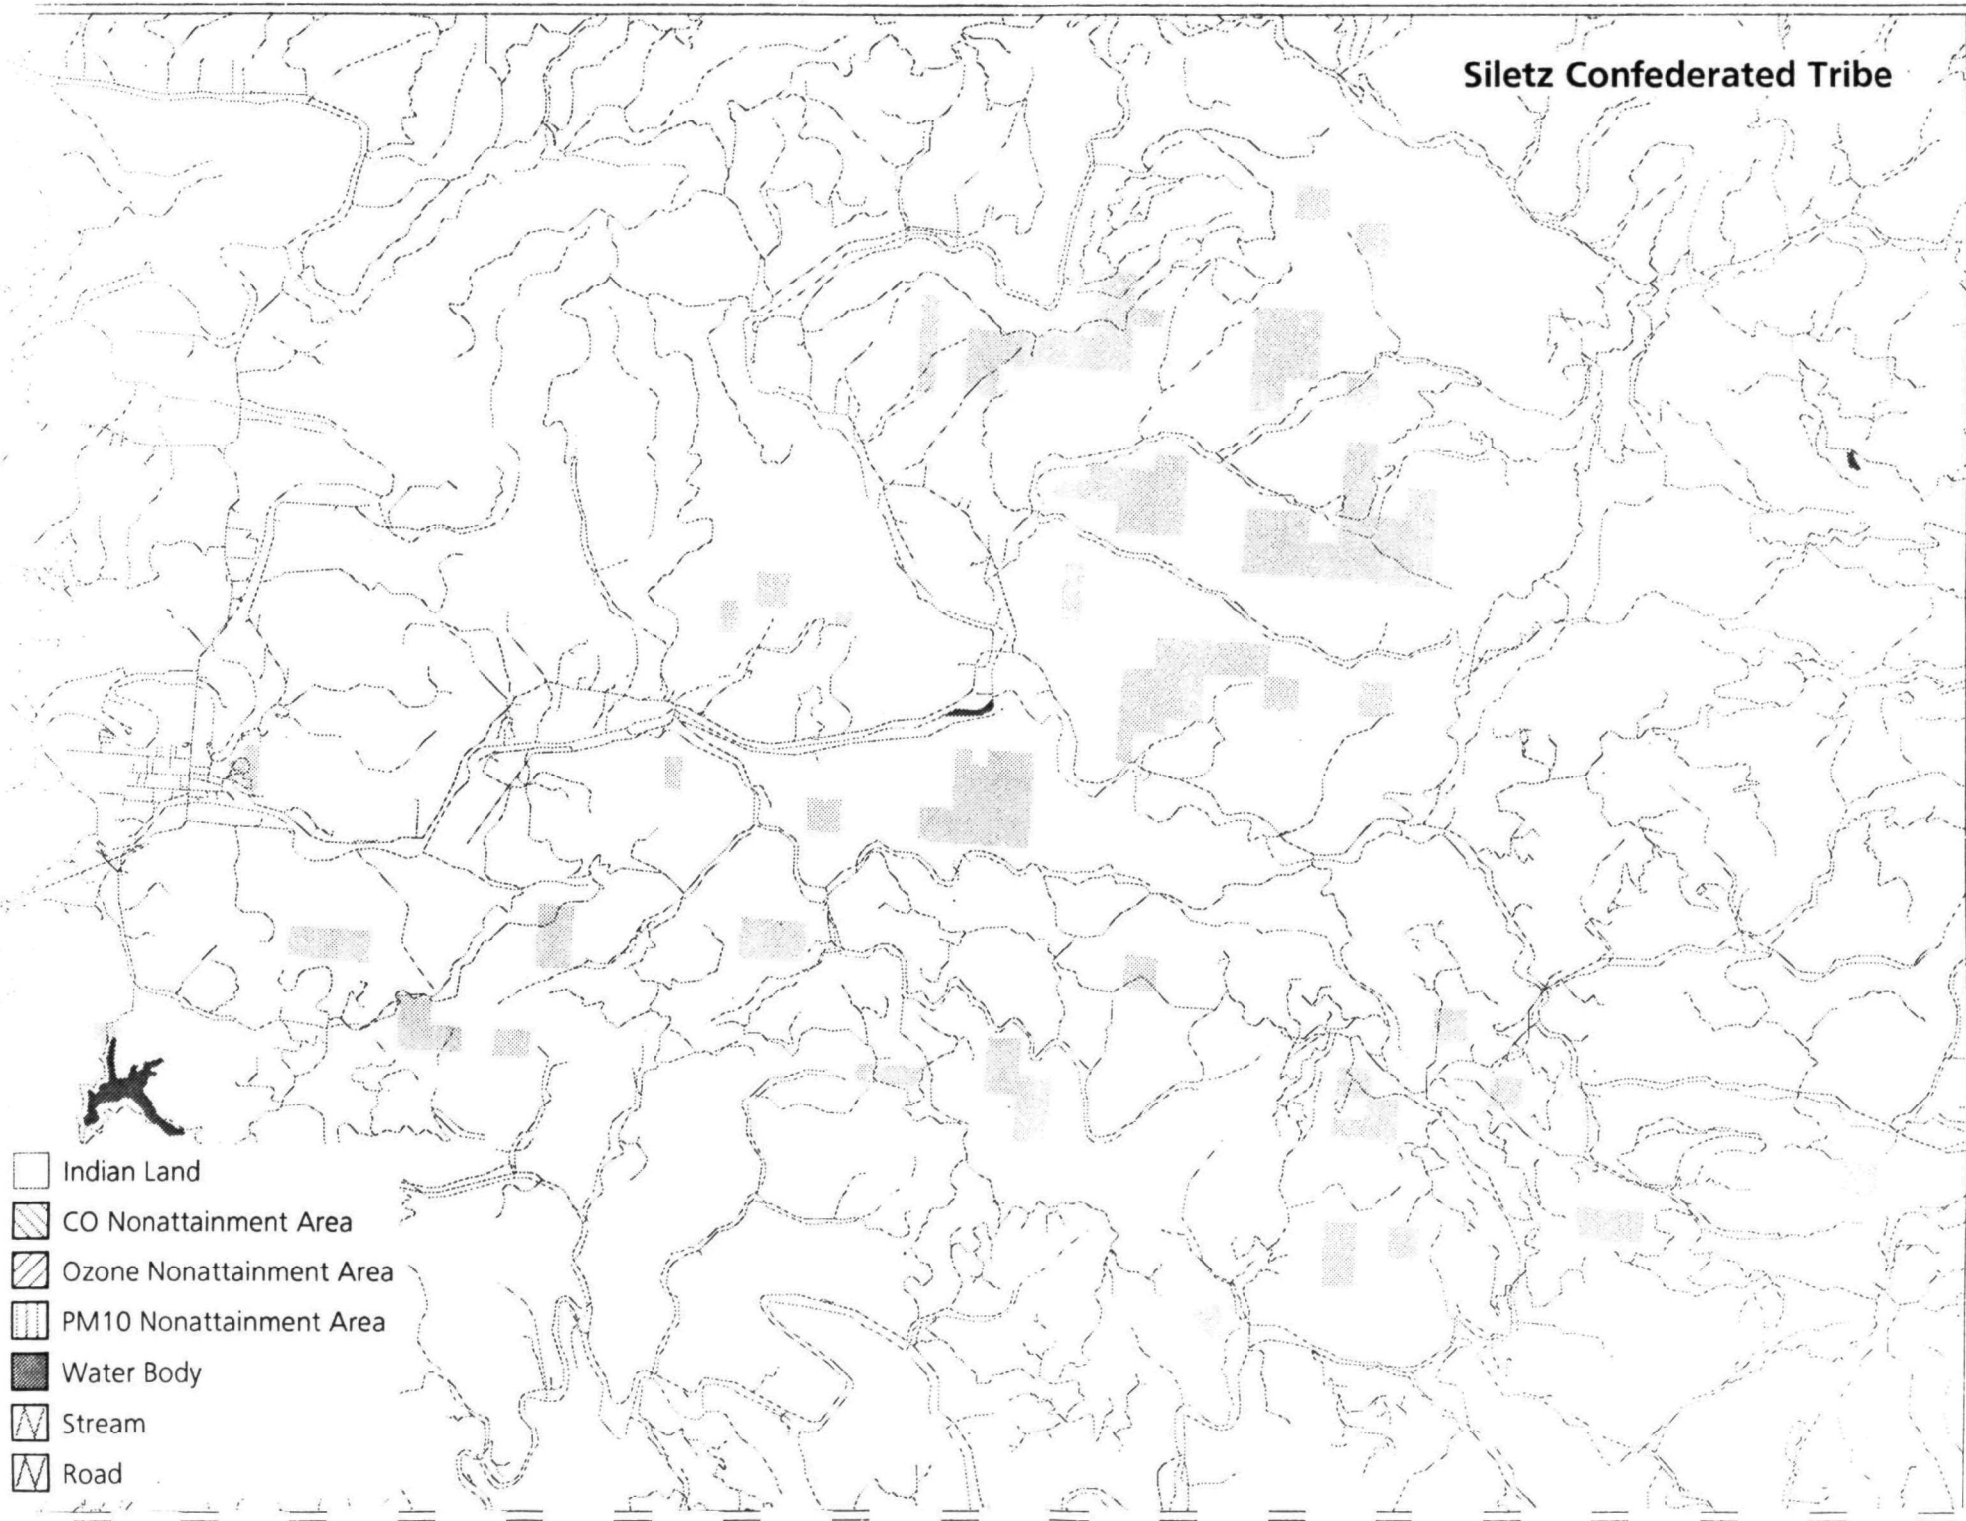

The tribe has had a fully functioning tribal government since 1975. The tribe's governmental base is the General Council that consists of all enrolled members over age 18. Under the General Council's authority are two major committees: the Klamath Executive Committee (KEC) and the Klamath Indian Game Commission (KIGC). The KEC members, including the tribal chairman, are democratically elected by the members of the General Council and compose the day to day governing body for the Tribe. The KIGC, in the auspices of the General Council, enacts game management regulation which are enforced by tribal game officers[8]

Background Data:

The original members of the Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians of Oregon were from many Tribes and Bands who resided over 19,000,000 acres of aboriginal western Oregon, and Northern California. In 1848 the U.S. Congress passed the Organic Act, claiming the aboriginal lands to be under the jurisdiction of the United States with the faith that the Indians rights and property would not be invaded or disturbed. Two years later, Congress passed the Oregon Donation Land Act, guaranteeing land to U.S. citizens. This commenced foreign invasion upon the Siletz homelands. Treaties were signed with many of the Tribes in 1851, but were not ratified by Congress

On September 10, 1853 the headmen of the Takelma, Shasta, and Dakubetede (Applegate) signed the Rogue River treaty which ceded all lands in exchange for payments and the right to stay on the temporary Table Rock Reservation until a permanent Reservation was selected by the President of the U.S. A similar treaty was signed by the Cow Creek Band of Umpqua to the north, who are actually Takelma speakers on September 19, 1853. On November 18, 1854 the Chasta, Scoton, and Grave Creek Umpqua Tribes (Shastas, Takelmas, and Galice Creeks) signed a treaty ceding their lands on the western border of the earlier Rogue River Treaty area. On November 29, 1854 a treaty with the Upper Umpquas and the Kalapuyas of the Umpqua Valley was signed which ceded their lands to the north of the Cow creek Treaty area, and gave them the right to stay in the Umpqua Valley region until a permanent reservation was provided. On January 22, 1855 the Willamette Bands treaty was signed ceding their lands and living in the Umpqua Valley until a reservation was provided. On December 21, 1855 the southern Molala Tribe signed a treaty ceding their land in the headwaters of the Umpqua River, they were temporarily moved to the camp on the Yamhill River before the Coast Reservation was ready. These Treaties were all Ratified by Congress. All of the Coast Tribes signed a second Treaty in 1855, which like the 1851 Treaty was not ratified by Congress.

On November 9, 1855, President Franklin Pierce signed an Executive Order which officially established the Coast Reservation, from Cape Lookout and the Siltcoos River bounded on the east by the western boundary of the eighth range of townships west of the Willamette Meridian equalling 1.1 million acres. On December 21, 1865, President Andrew Johnson signed an Executive Order which removed over 200,000 acres from the reservation that contained the Yaguina Bay oyster beds, and split the Coast Reservation in half. The northern district became the Siletz Reservation and the southern portion was called the Alsea Reservation. The Act of March 3, 1875 removed about 700,000 acres from the reservation. In 1892, the General Allotment Act broke up the land into individual allotments for the tribal members and commercial timberland rights of 3,200 acres if the Tribe would release of 192,000 acres to be sold at 74 cents an acre. Frustration occurred during the 1940's when the Indian claims commission for the Coast tribes (Tillamook, Alsea, Coquille, Tututni, Chetco bands), that signed the 1855 unratified Treaty but compensated them only at a value equal to that of 1855. Continuing frustration occurred as the ratified treaty tribes were denied their treaty protection when their reservation taken without compensation. In 1954 the U.S. Government terminated their federal trust relationship with the Confederated Tribes of the Siletz, and remained without federal recognition until 1977. In 1980, a Bill passed into effect returning 3,600 acres of Public Domain lands to the Siletz for reservation lands in Lincoln County, in exchange for agreement to let the State limit the tribes hunting and fishing rights. Today the tribe owns 4,000 acres of land in trust for its 2,264 enrolled tribal members[10]. The tribe is proud to be one of the 23 tribes in the US to have become part of the Self-Governance Demonstration Project giving the tribal government more control over the sawmill provided to the membership. There is a nine member governing tribal council.

Background Data:

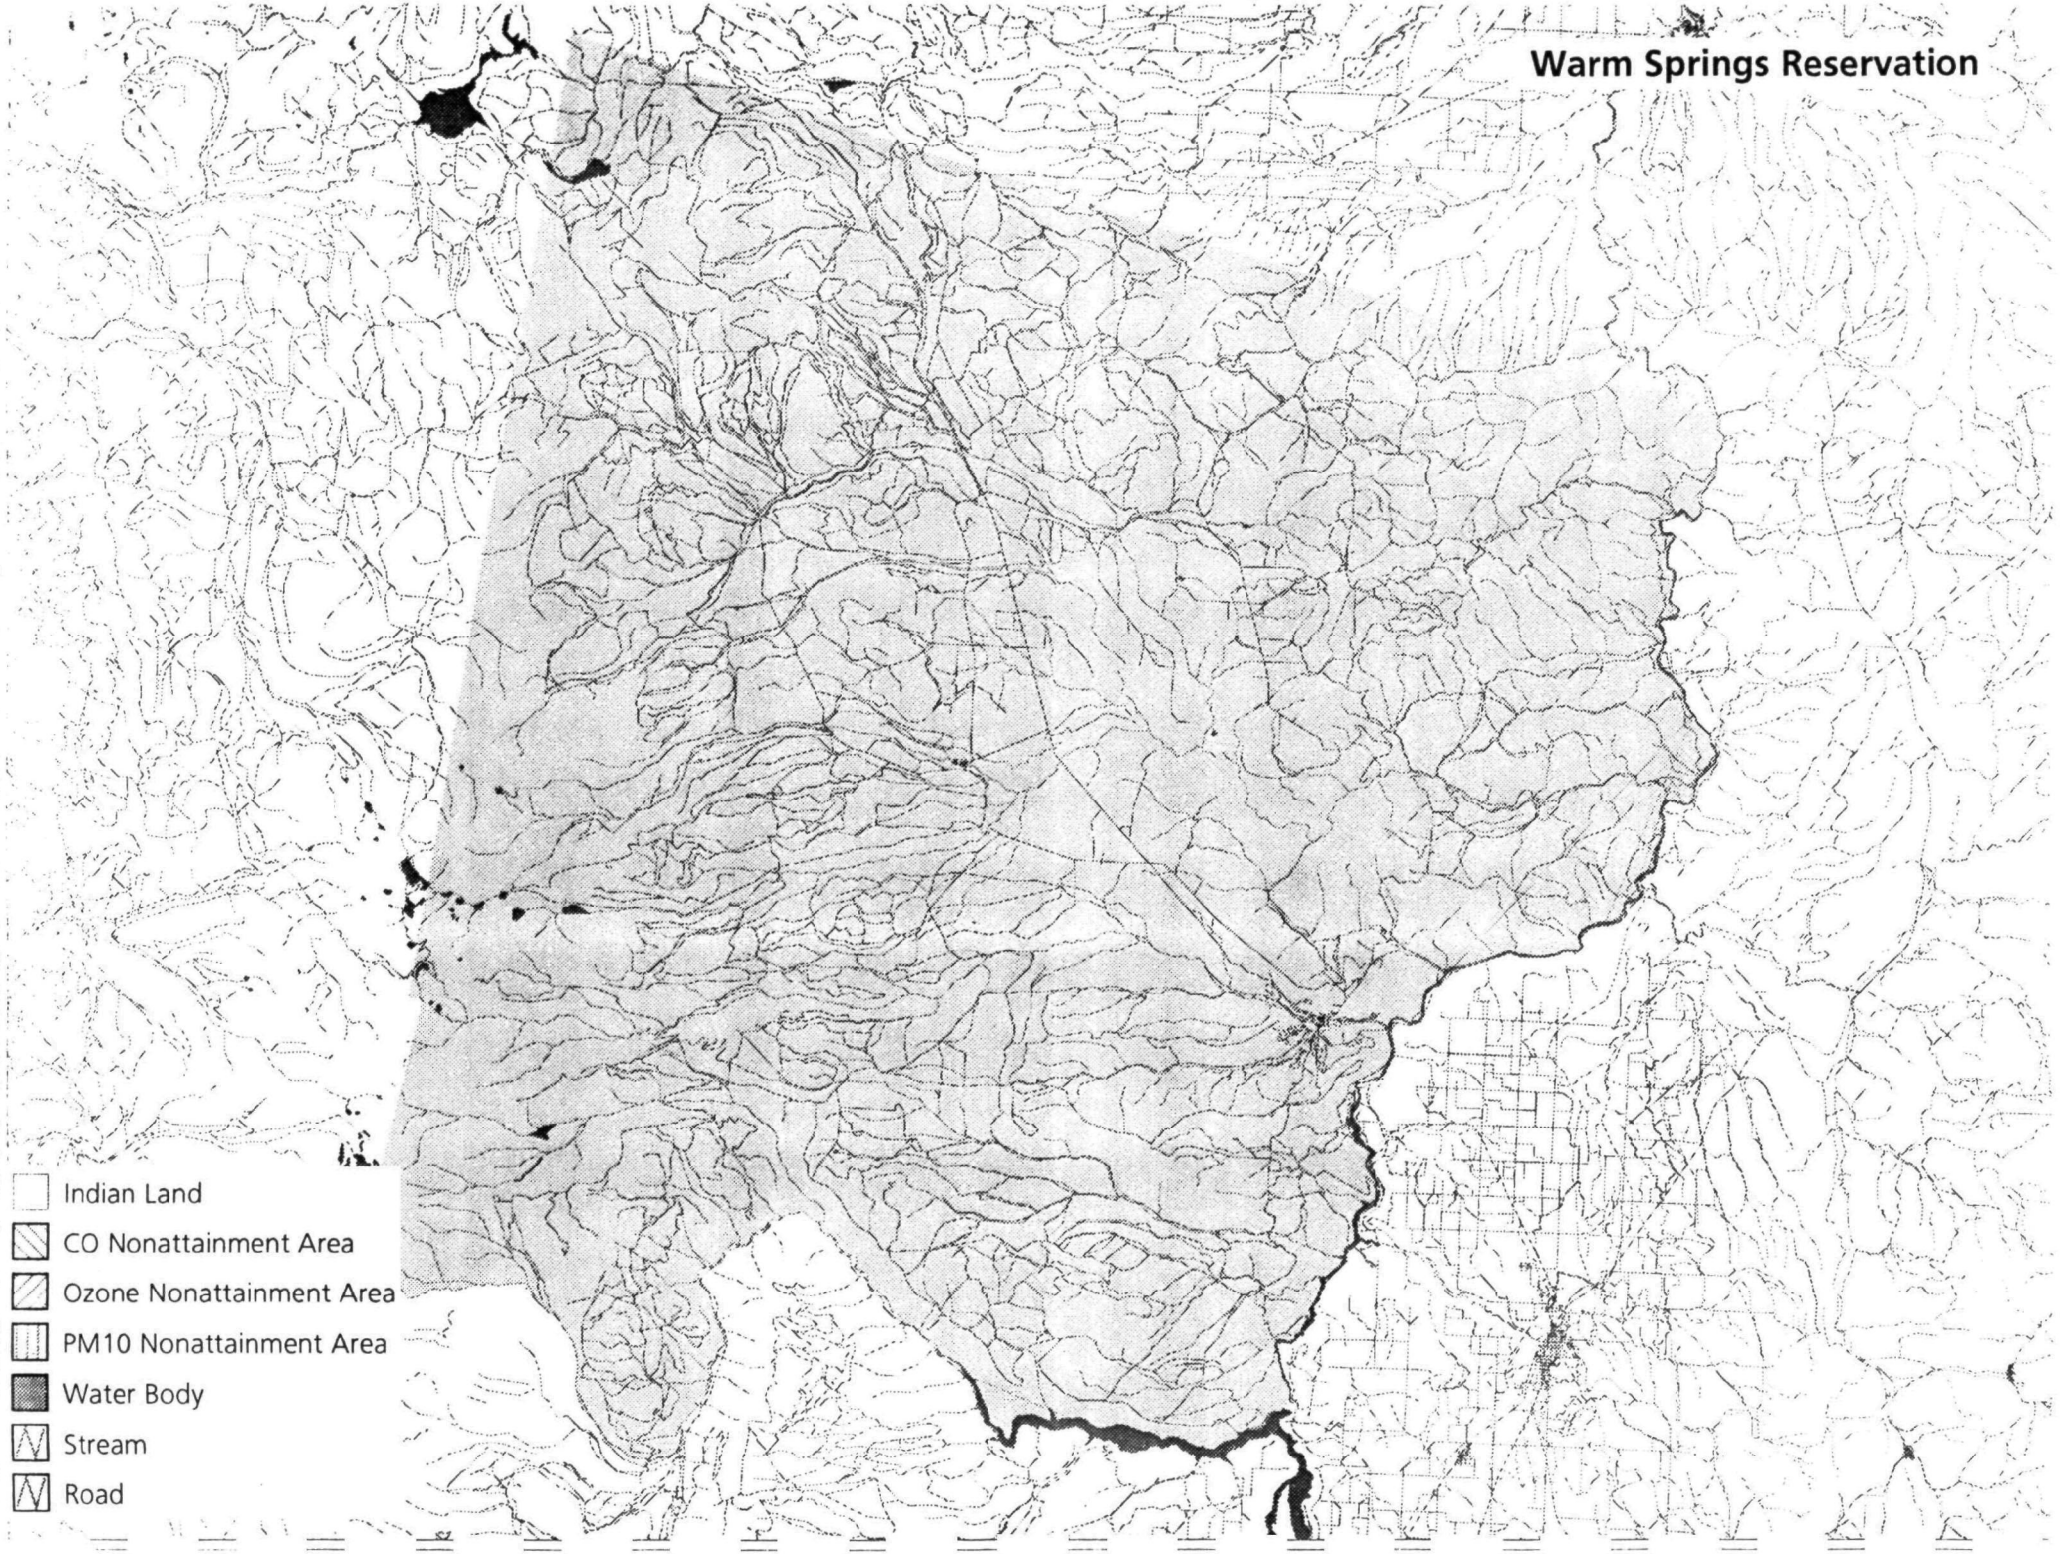

The Umatilla Reservation contains descendants of the Cayuse, Walla Walla and the Umatilla tribes. A Treaty was signed on June 9, 1855 that established the Umatilla as a Reservation of 500,000 acres. The Reservation was ratified by Congress on March 1859 12 statute 945 to decrease the Reservation size to 245,699. The Dawes Act diminished the Reservation to 158,000 acres in 1885. From 1922 through 1939 the Mariam Report/Restoration Act restored to the Tribes in the McKay, Johnson, and McCoy Creek 14,139 acres. Of the total 172,139 acres in trust for the tribes in the counties of Umatilla and Union, 20,440 acres are owned by the tribe, 68,350 acres are in Indian allotments, and 83,349 acres are owned by the City, County, State, or other non-Indians. The Umatilla Constitution and By-laws were adopted on November 1949. The tribal government at Umatilla consists of a nine member Board of Trustees that look after the best interest of its 1,346 enrolled members[11].

Background Data:

The three tribes of the Warm Springs Reservation, Wasco, the Walla Walla (later called the Warm Springs), and the Paiute, developed their societies beside the Columbia River and the Cascade Mountains. The Wasco bands on the Columbia River were the eastern-most group of Chinookan-speaking Indians. Their closest upriver neighbors, the Warm Springs bands who lived along the Columbia's tributaries, spoke Sahaptin. The Paiutes lived in southeastern Oregon and spoke a Shoshonean dialect. Over the centuries, these and other tribal groups had developed an extensive economic network that depended on the Columbia River and its salmon.

In 1855, 89 Indians (including members of the Walla Walla bands of Tygh, the Wyam, the Tenino, and the Dock-Spus) signed a treaty that moved them to a reservation that Joel Palmer, Superintendent for the Oregon Territory, chose for them and ceded approximately 10 million acres of land. The treaty tribes kept their rights to harvest fish, game and other foods off the reservation. The treaty was not ratified by the U.S. Senate until 1859. In 1887 the Dawes Act was passed by Congress allowing individual Indians to own reservation lands and allowed non-Indians to own "surplus" lands.

In 1872, President Grant set aside the Malheur Indian Reservation in southeastern Oregon for the Paiutes as they did not sign the 1855 treaty that established the Warm Springs reservation. In 1878 the Bannocks from the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho urged the Paiutes to join them in fighting the U.S. Army. The Army forced many Paiutes to move to the Yakima Reservation, and many were imprisoned at Fort Vancouver. In 1882, because no Paiutes remained on the Malheur Reservation, President Garfield returned its lands to the public domain. As the Paiutes were released from Fort Vancouver 38 moved to the Warm Spring Reservation in 1879 in the counties of Clackamas, Jefferson, Linn, Marion, and Wasco. During the next 5 years, they were joined by those living on the Yakima.

In 1934 the Indian Reorganization Act revitalized Indian communities and bolstered Indian tribes as governments. In 1937 the three tribes organized as the Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs Reservation of Oregon by adopting a constitution and by-laws for tribal government. The Constitution established an 11-member council to oversee all tribal operations on their 641,035 acres of land. In 1974 Congress approved the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance act which allowed tribal control over education, health care, natural resource management, law enforcement and other services funded by the Federal government. There are currently 2,983 enrolled Paiute members of the Warm Springs Reservation[12].

Background Data:

Descendants of the tribes of Upper Chehalis, Lower Chehalis, Cowlitz, and Satsop (and perhaps Wahkiakum) refused to sign a treaty under which they would have agreed to give up their land and to move to a reservation in a different area with the Quinaults. Some Chehalis received allotments on the Quinault Reservation. Chehalis Reservation was created by Executive Order in 1864. Chehalis is in litigation to determine existence/extent of usufruct rights. Constitution and bylaws were approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1939.

About half of the 4,225 acre reservation is in trust status for its 500 enrolled tribal members. The reservation population is estimated at 500, with around 300 tribal members in the counties of Grays Harbor and Thurston. The tribe is governed by a 5 member business council, serving 2 year terms. The Chehalis Community Council manages the tribe's property and assets, administers tribal funds and programs, and enforces ordinances[13].

Background Data:

Descendants of the Okanogan, Colville, Lake, San Poil, Nespelim, Moses Columbus, Methow, Chelan, Entiat, Wenatchee, Joseph's Nez Perce and Palus bands form the present Colville confederation. Salmon (Kettle Falls fishery), hunting and gathering is important to the culture. The Reservation was created by Executive Order on April 9, 1872. The initial Colville Reservation existed for only several months due to illegal immigrants and settlers invasion. Columbus Reservation existed from 1879 to 1886 west of Okanogan River for Moses Columbus, Methow, Okanogan people. They moved onto the Colville Reservation, although some retained allotments in this former territory, in 1886. On July 1, 1892, the north half of the Colville reservation was ceded in exchange for 51,653 acres. In 1930's, Grand Coulee Dam was constructed, blocking salmon migration to Kettle Falls and devastating cultural impact. The Colville tribe retains hunting and fishing rights in the ceded north half of the reservation. Colville is in litigation determining the existence and extent of usufruct rights held by members from Yakima Treaty cessions. The Constitution and bylaws were approved by referendum in 1938.

About 80% of the 14 million reservation is in trust status for its 7,400 enrolled tribal members. The reservation population, in the counties of Okanagon and Ferry, is about 8,500 and about half Indian. The Colville Confederated Tribes are governed by a 14 member Colville Business Council, elected for 2 year terms. Half the council positions are up for election every year[13]

Background Data:

The Hoh indian tribe are a distinct branch of the Quileute Nation, historically centered around the mouth and length of the Hoh River. Families are also closely aligned with the Queets people of the Quinault Nation. The Hoh signed the Treaty of Quinault River in 1855 and are included as a band of the Quil-leh-ute Tribe in that Treaty. The Hoh Reservation was established by Executive Order in 1893. The Tribe retains usufruct rights in ceded territory from Treaty. The Hoh retained treaty fishing rights and are a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The reservation, in Jefferson County, is entirely in trust status for its 120 enrolled tribal members. The 443 acre reservation contains a population of 96 that includes 22 non-Indians. The tribe approved the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act and adopted a constitution on 1969. A 4 member Business Committee Governs the tribe and is elected for 2 year terms[13]

Background Data:

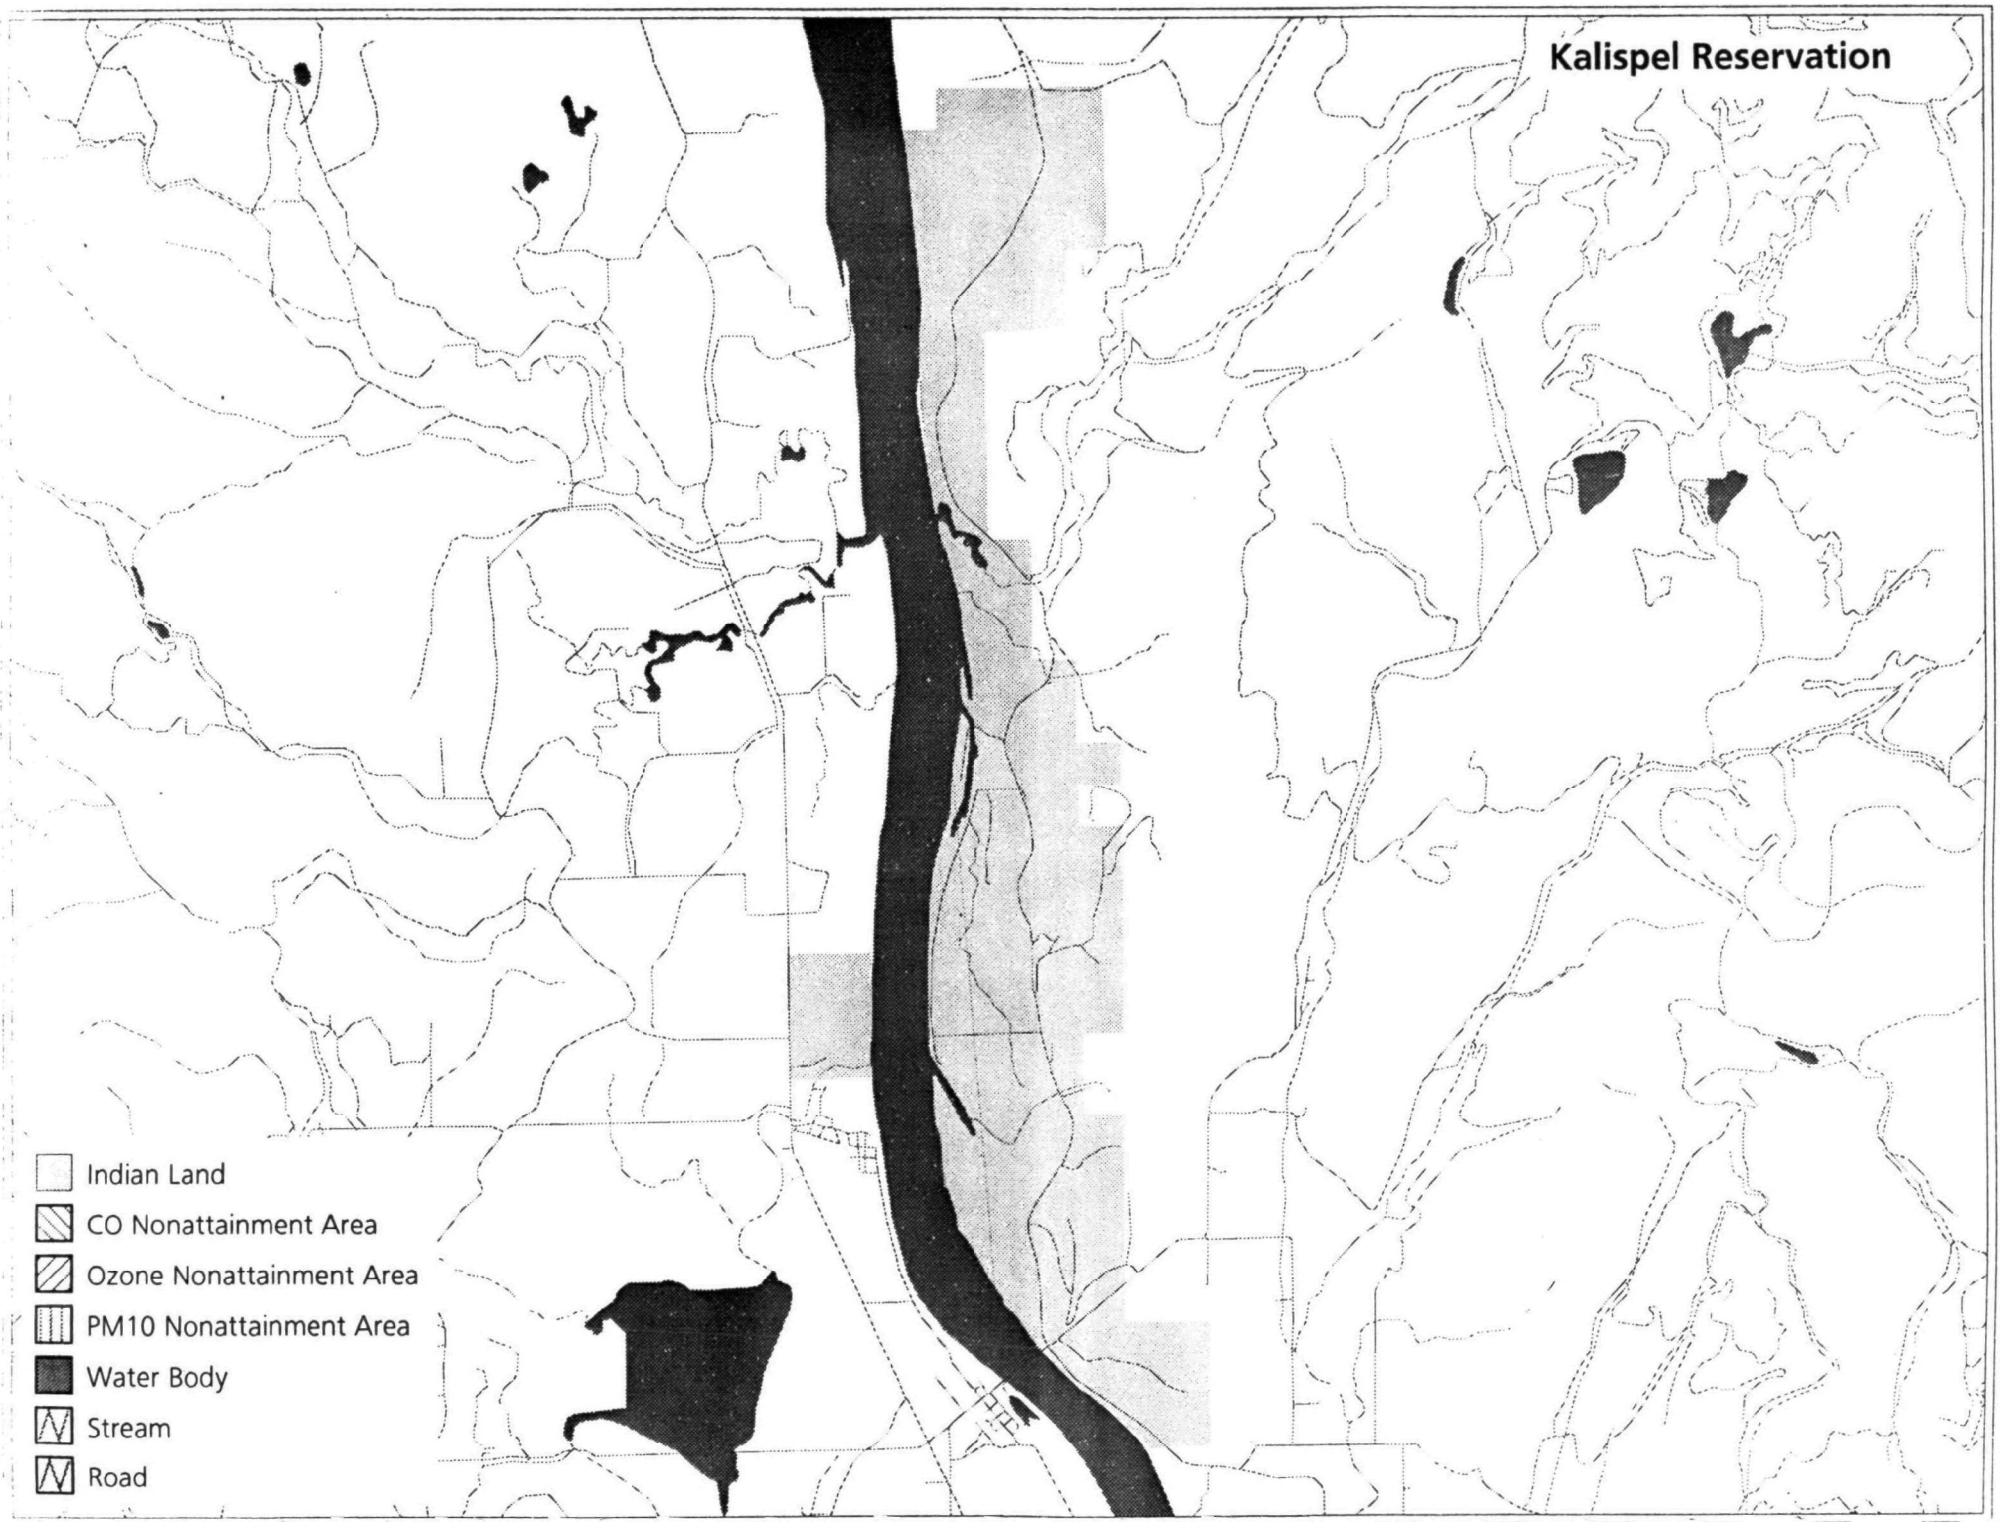

The Jamestown S'Klallam are one of three S'Klallam tribes to sign the Treaty of No Point in 1855 (47 S'Klallams signed this treaty). These three distinct modern tribes descended from Klallam tribes and bands which, at the earlier European contacts, occupied over 14 villages along the north end of the Olympic Peninsula from the Hoko River to Hood Canal with sites on Vancouver Island. Soon after treaty times the Klallam tribes incorporated the descendants of the Chimicum Tribe (3 Chimicum signed the treaty). The Klallams were intended to reside on the Skokomish Reservation. Instead the Jamestown band remained near the Dungeness River on land purchased from the European settlers.

The Jamestown S'Klallams received federal recognition in 1981. In 1982, a 2 acre reservation was created. Since then additional land has been purchased in Clallam County. The Tribe retains usufruct rights in ceded lands from Treaty. The Jamestown S'Klallam are represented on the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission and are a member of the Point No Point Treaty Council.

The Tribe is a Self Governance Tribe with a 5 member Tribal Council elected by the 226 enrolled members for 3 year terms. The Tribe's service population (tribal members and other Indians) is 699. The Tribe is active in a number of community based natural resource forums[13].

Background Data:

The tribe descended from the Salish band located along the Pend Oreille River. They traded and shared resources with both the Upper Columbia tribes (Shwayip) and with the Flathead and Kootenai. Their reservation was established by Executive Order in 1887.

The Kalispel accepted the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act, and chartered a constitution in 1939. Revised in 1967, it provides for the Kalispel Indian Council to be the tribal governing body

The entire 4,600 acre reservation, in Pend Orielle county, is in entirely trust status. The reservation population is 100 and includes 9 non-Indians. A 5 member Business Council are elected to 3 year terms in order to serve the best interests for the 240 enrolled tribal members[13].

Background Data:

The Lower Elwha S'Klallam Tribe is one of three S'Klallam tribes to sign the Treaty of No Point in 1855 (47 S'Klallams signed this treaty). These three distinct modern tribes descended from S'Klallam tribes and bands which, at the earlier European contacts, occupied over 14 villages along the north end of the Olympic Peninsula from the Hoko River to Hood Canal with sites on Vancouver Island. The Lower Elwha S'Klallam Tribe specifically descended from tribes and bands that once occupied the western area of Klallam territory, including the length of the Elwha River. Soon after treaty times the Klallam tribes incorporated the descendants of the Chimicum Tribe (3 Chimicum signed the treaty). The S'Klallams were intended to reside on the Skokomish Reservation. The US. government purchased land on behalf of the Lower Elwha S'Klallam in 1936 for a Reservation under the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act. The Tribe retains usufruct rights in ceded territories from Treaty. The Lower Elwha possesses treaty fishing rights and participate in both the Point-No-Point Treaty Council and the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

A constitution was approved in 1968 that established the Lower Elwha Tribal Community Council, a sovereign political unit composed of the community's qualified voters. The council elects members to a 5 member business Council composing the governing body for the tribe, with elections held annually.

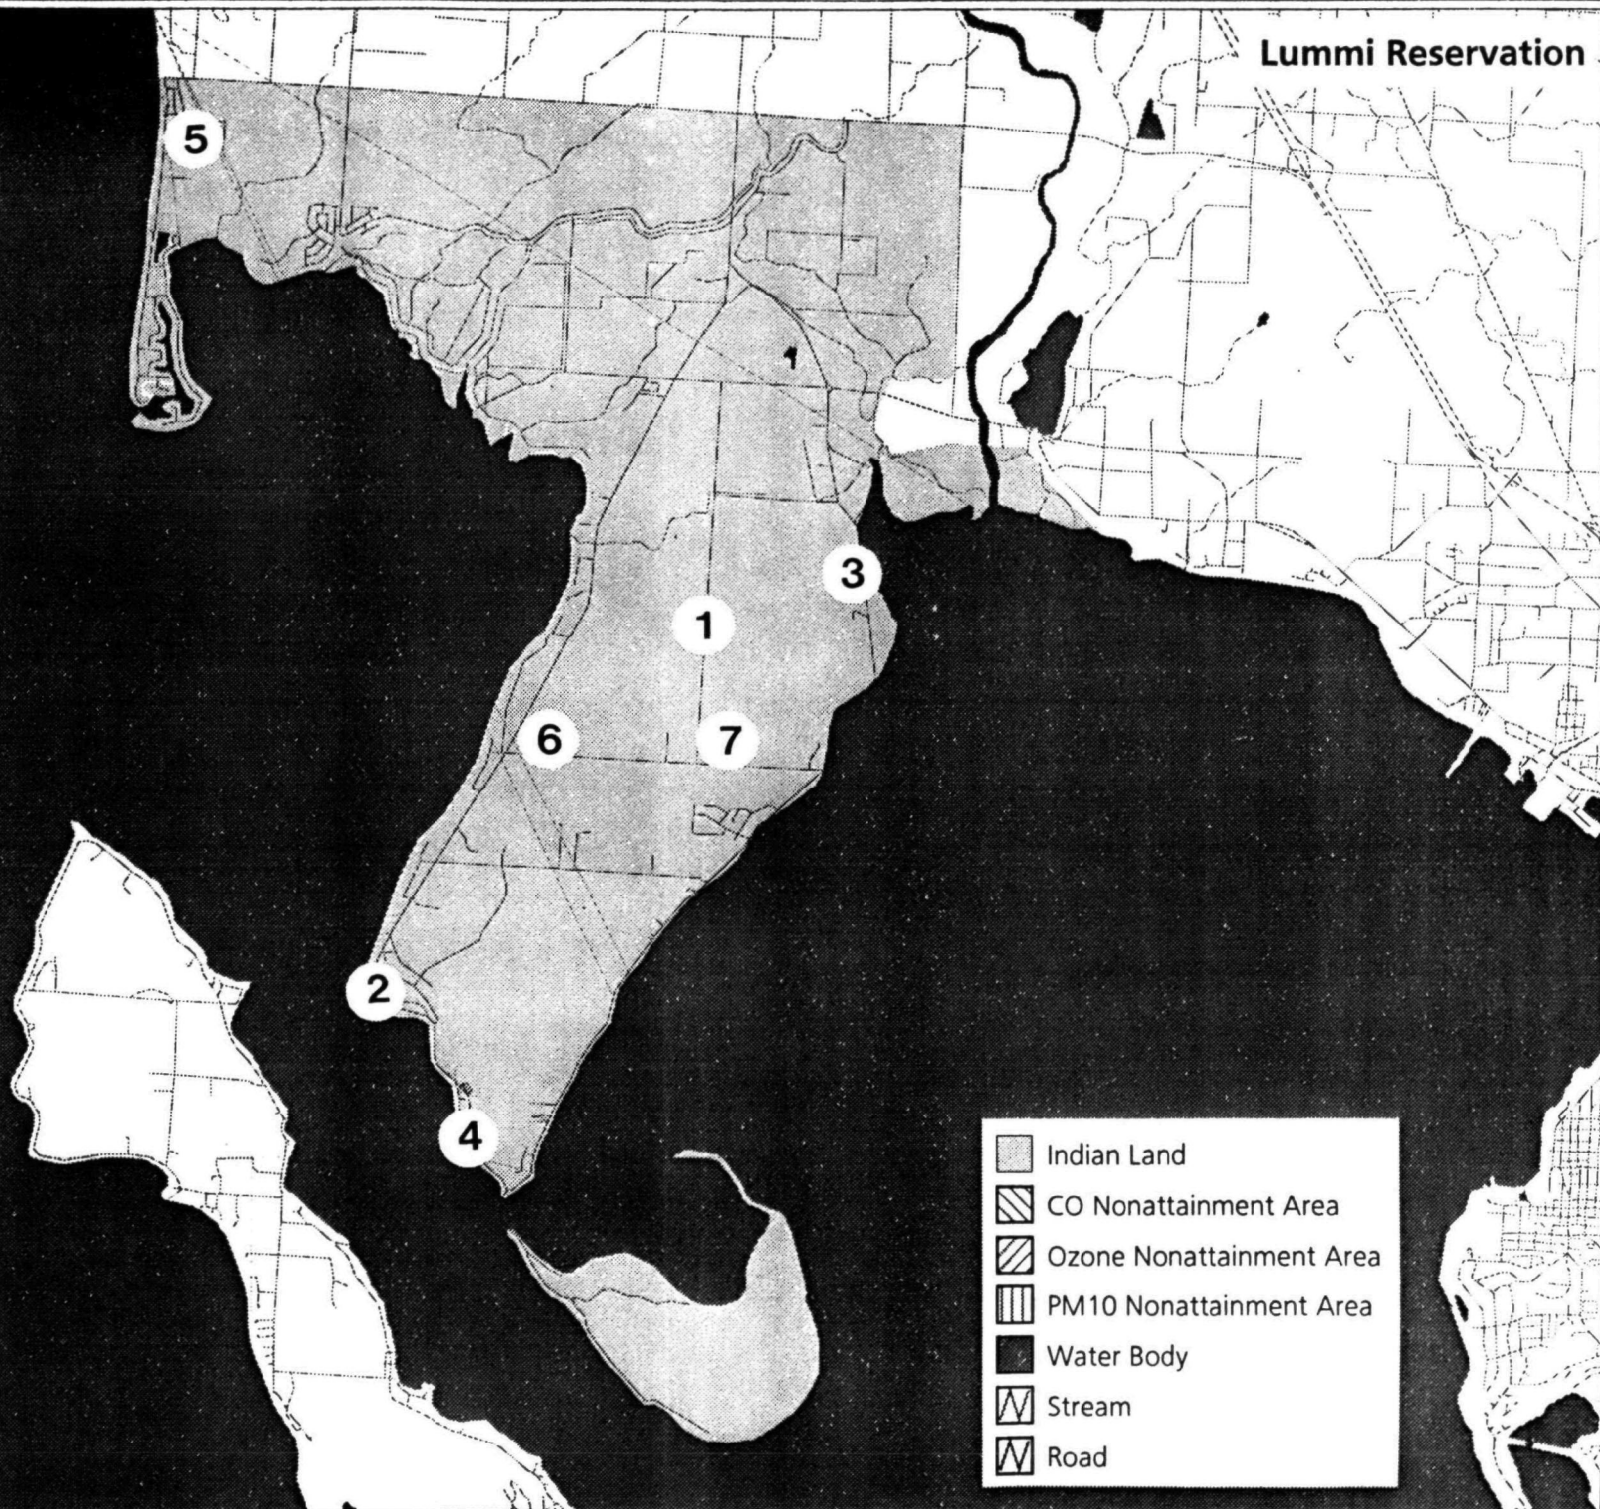

The 500 acre reservation in Clallam county is entirely in trust status and is available to the 530 enrolled tribal members. The population is 140, with 10 non-Indians residing on the reservation⁵

Background Data:

The Lummi descended from the tribes and bands which inhabited the Bellingham Bay area to Point Roberts including the mouth of the Nooksack River and part of the San Juans. Fourteen Lummi tribal members signed the Treaty of Point Elliott in 1859 which established their reservation. At treaty times they were also known as the Nook-Lummi, related to up river tribe, Nooksack. The Lummi reservation was enlarged by Executive Order in 1873. The Tribe retains treaty fishing rights and are a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The total reservation acreage (21,000) includes about 7,400 acres of tidelands that are held in trust status also. Of the total reservation acreage in Whatcom county, about 6,000 acres are in fee status, primarily owned by non-Indians. The population estimate for the reservation is approximately 3,200 with about 1,500 non-Indians residing there.

A constitution adopted in 1970 gives broad powers to the Business Council. The 11 member Business Council are elected to 3 year terms for the benefit of the 3,200 enrolled tribal members[13].

Background Data:

The Makahs signed the Treaty Neah Bay in 1855. They were the only tribe to sign this treaty. They descended from the treaty-time villages of Neah, Waatch, Tsoo-yeas and Ozette. The Makah spoke a language rooted in a northern language family not the Coast Salish or Puget Sound Language from which all other western Washington tribe's dialects are derived. The Makah's distinct culture emphasized whaling harvesting. The Reservation was enlarged by Executive Orders in 1872 and 1873. The Tribe retains treaty fishing rights and are a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The total reservation acreage in Clallam county is 28,160, 48 acres of which are undeveloped. Of the total acreage, 370 acres are held in fee status. The reservation population is estimated to be about 1,200, with about 270 non-Indians. The governing body is a 5 member Business Council (Makah Indian Tribal Council), elected to staggered 3 year terms to serve the best interests of the 1,600 enrolled members [13].

Background Data:

The Muckleshoot Tribe descended from tribes and bands who inhabited the Green River, the White River, and Stuck River, the Cedar River and their tributary creeks. Treaty-time bands included the Skopamish, Stkamish, and the Smulkamish. Chief Seattle signed the Treaty of Point Elliott in 1854 on behalf of these tribes who later formed the Muckleshoot Tribe. They were named this because of the location of the reservation on the Muckleshoot Prairie in 1857 by Executive Order. The Tribe retains fishing rights by treaty and are members of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The reservation in King County totals 3,850 acres for the use of the 850 enrolled tribal members. About 2,270 acres of the total reservation is held in fee status. The reservation population is 3,840 of which about 865 are Indian.

The Muckleshoot Tribe approved a constitution establishing the Muckleshoot Indian Tribal Council as a sovereign political entity in 1936. The Council is made up of 9 members who are elected for staggered 3 year terms[13].

Background Data:

The Nooksack Tribe signed the Treaty of Point Elliot in 1855. At treaty times they were also known as the Nook-Lummi, related to the Lummi Tribe. The Tribe descended from the Upper Nooksack River tribes and bands located throughout the river system (including Canada) with villages at the tributaries. The Nooksack bands traded freely with Lummi bands and participated in joint fisheries. They received formal recognition in early 1973, and .9 acres of trust land was set aside as reservation in 1980. The reservation land base increased by purchasing an additional 9.1 acres. The tribe retains fishing rights and participates in the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The current reservation in Whatcom county is entirely in trust status for its 1,060 enrolled tribal members. Individual tribal members hold 2,900 acres held in trust allotments in former ceded territories. The reservation population is estimated at 556, with 144 non-Indians residing on the reservation. Background Data:

The Puyallup Tribe descended from the tribes and bands located in villages on the Puyallup River, Commencement Bay, and Vashon Island (Homamush people). The Puyallup Tribe and the Homamush Tribe, located on Vashon Island at treaty-time, are related tribes named in the Treaty. The Puyallups signed the Treaty of Medicine Creek in 1854 that established their reservation. The Reservation was enlarged by executive orders in 1857 and 1873. The reservation includes portions of Tacoma, Milton, and all of Fife. The tribe retains usufruct rights in areas ceded by Treaty. They Puyallups signed an agreement relinquishing claims to disputed territories unlawfully taken within reservation borders in 1988. The tribe is reaching several management agreements with the state through the 1988 Puyallup Land Claims settlement Agreement that address jurisdiction and management issues.

The 18,062 acre reservation, located in Pierce County, is almost entirely held in fee status. Of the total acreage, only 90 acres are held in trust for the 1,800 enrolled Puyallup Tribe members. The reservation population is estimated at 32,400 of which only 940 are Indians. A 5 member tribal council is elected to 3 year terms[13].

Background Data:

The Quileute tribe are primarily descendants from the Quil-leh-ute and related tribes and bands inhabiting the watersheds of the Quileute, Hoh, Dickey, Soleduch, and Bogachiel River systems and along the coast. They are politically distinct from but closely related to the Hoh Tribe. The Quileute tribe signed the Treaty of Olympia in 1855 (Treaty negotiated at Quinault River). The Reservation was established by Executive Order in 1889 and is located in Clallam County. The tribe retains treaty fishing rights and are members of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The 884 acre reservation is entirely in trust status, the land remaining un-allotted for the 740 enrolled tribal members. The reservation population is 381, with 78 non-Indians residing there. A 5 member, Quileute tribal council are elected to 3 year terms [13].

Background Data:

The Quinault Indian Nation signed the Treaty of Quinault River in 1856 (Treaty of Olympia). The reservation was established in 1856 for the Quinault and Queets tribes whose villages were located in the watersheds of the Quinault, Queets, Salmon, Clearwater, Moclips, and Copalis rivers as well as on Lake Quijault. Some members from other tribes (such as the Ozette, Hoh, Chinook, Chehalis, and Cowlitz) also became part of the reservation through land allotments when the reservation was enlarged in 1873 by executive order to cover Jefferson and Grays Harbor counties. The tribe retains treaty fishing rights and participates in the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

Of the total 208,150 acre reservation, 62,445 acres are in fee status (16%). The reservation population is estimated at 1,216 with 273 non-Indians residing there. An 11 member Business Committee serves 3 year terms in the interest of the 2,280 enrolled tribal members[13].

Background Data:

The Sauk-Suiattle primarily descended from tribes and bands who lived on the upper reaches of the Skagit River system. These bands/tribes included the Sakhumehu Tribe (Sauk River Indians) which, at treaty-time were located at the confluence Sauk and Skagit Rivers, as well as other tribes of the Sauk, Suiattle, Cascade rivers and their upper reach tributaries. The Sauk-Suiattle signed the treaty of Point Elliott in 1855. They received formal federal recognition in 1973 and a reservation was established in Skagit county in 1982. The tribe retains treaty fishing rights and participate in the Skagit System Cooperative and Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The 23 acre reservation is entirely in trust status for the 210 enrolled tribal members. The Reservation population is estimated at 124, with 55 non-Indians residing there. A 7 member Business Council is elected to 3 year terms[13].

Background Data:

The Shoalwater Bay Tribe are primarily descended from tribes and bands living around Willapa (formerly, Shoalwater) Bay and Grays Harbor, including the Lower Chinook and Lower Chehalis. The Tribe refused to sign a treaty of Quinalt River under which they would have agreed to give up their ancestral land for a shared reservation with the Quinalt and Chehalis located around the current Quinalt Reservation. An Executive Order in 1866 established the Shoalwater reservation in Pacific County. The Shoalwater Tribe has been seeking legislative/judicial remedies to restore usufruct rights.

The total reservation acreage is 1035, of which 395 acres are tide flats. Of the total acreage, 295 acres held in fee status. The reservation population is 130, with 64 non-Indians residing. A 5 member Business Council serves 2 year terms for the betterment of the 140 enrolled tribal members[13].

Background Data:

The Skokomish Tribe primarily descended from the Skokomish and other tribes of the Twana (Too-an-ooch) Nation located along the length of Hood Canal, on the Skokomish River, and on all of the waterways draining into Hood Canal. The Skokomish signed the Treaty of Point No Point on January 26, 1855. The Treaty was signed by 5 representatives of the Skokomish Tribe, and ratified by Congress on March 8, 1859. The Reservation was enlarged by Executive Order on February 25, 1874, and is located in Mason county. The Tribe retains usufruct rights in areas ceded by Treaty.

Of the total 4,987 acre reservation, 1,948 are held in fee status. The reservation population is 614, with 183 non-Indians residing there. The Skokomish Tribe is organized under the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934. The Tribe adopted a constitution and by-laws under this Act, establishing a federally recognized tribe approved by the secretary of Interior. A new constitution was approved by voting tribal members on January 15, 1980 and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on March 15, 1980. Background Data:

The Squaxin Island Tribe descended from tribes and bands inhabiting the inlets of Henderson, Budd (Steh-chass), Eld (Squi-aitl Tribe), Totten (T'Peeksin Tribe), Hammersley (Sa-heh-warmish Tribe) and Case (Sqak-sin Tribe). They signed the Treaty of Medicine Creek in 1854 and were consolidated on the Squaxin Island Reservation in Mason County. The tribe retains fishing rights in areas ceded by Treaty and are a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

Of the total 2,175 acre reservation acreage, 1,087 acres are in fee status. The population is 157, with 30 non-Indians residing upon the reservation. A 5 member Tribal Council is elected for 3 year terms to provide decisions for the 374 enrolled tribal members[13].

Background Data:

The Stillaguamish descended from Stouluch-wa-mish residing on the main, north and south forks of the Stillaguamish River and its tributaries. They signed the Treaty of Point Elliot in 1855. When no reservation was established, some people moved onto the Tulalip Indian reservation, while many remained in their aboriginal area. The Tribe received federal recognition in 1976. Small acreage converted to trust status in 1984, from tribal purchases, forms the reservation community in Snohomish County. The Tribe retains fishing rights in areas ceded by Treaty and are a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

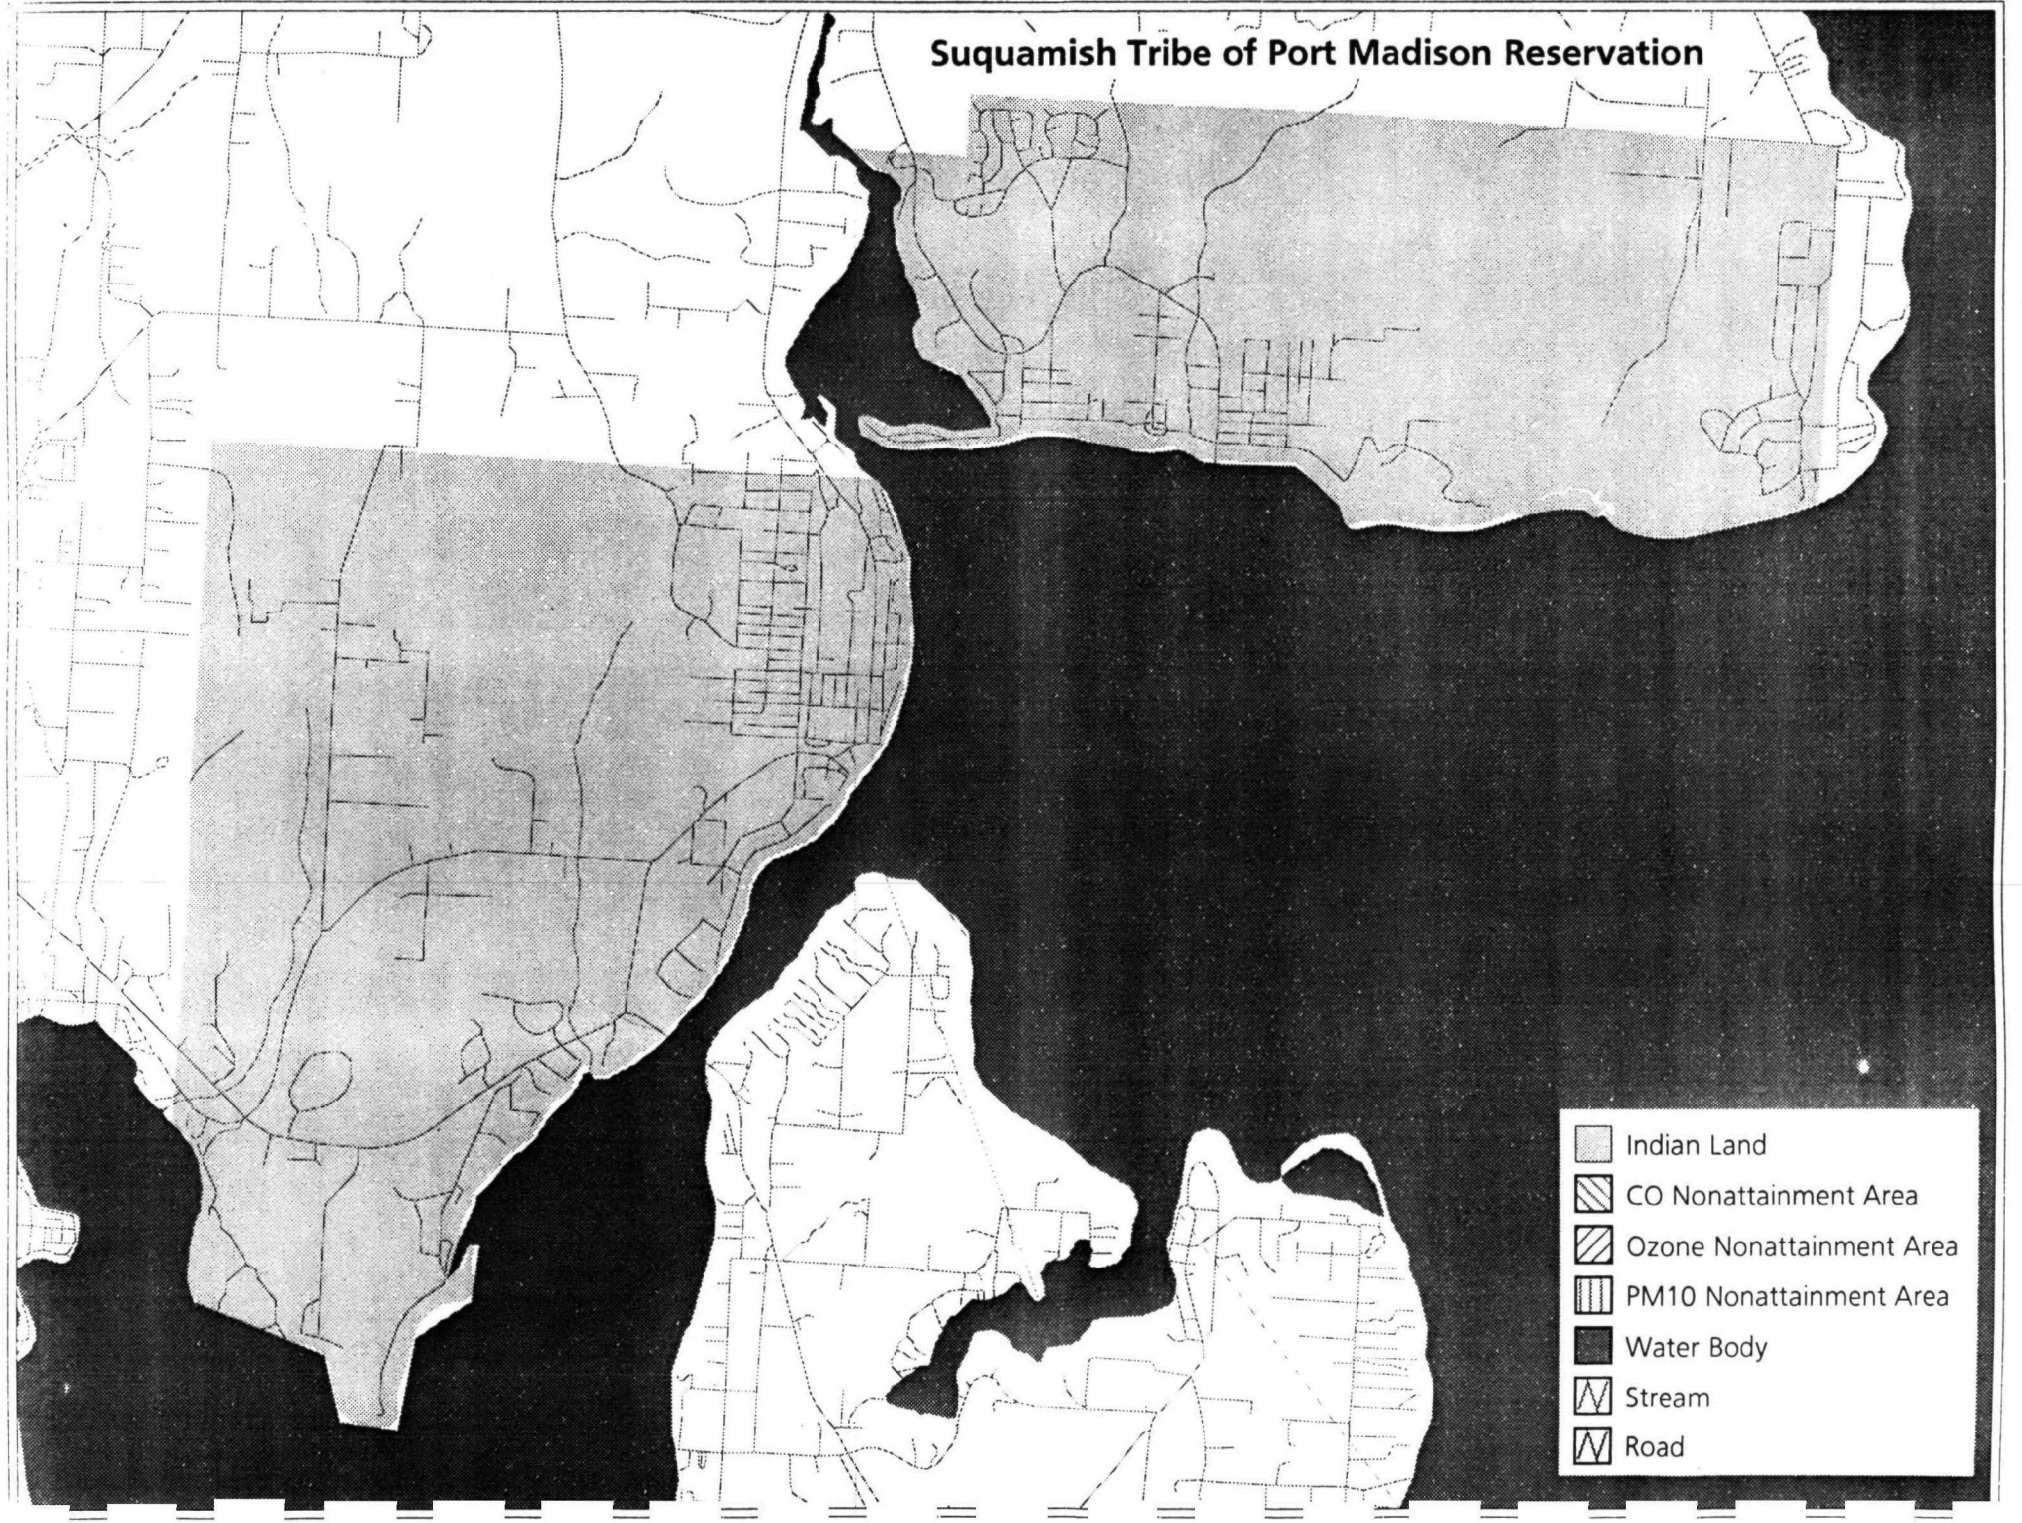

The total reservation acreage is 21 acres, for use by the 200 enrolled tribal members as residential property. The total tribal population is 200, with 17 non-Indians residing. A 6 member Tribal Council serves 3 year terms[13].

The Swinomish primarily descended from tribes of the central and northern Puget Sound basin, included bands generally identified as Swinomish, Snohomish and Samish; related to Upper Skagit, Suak-Suiattle and Stillaguamish tribes and bands. They signed the Treaty of Point Elliot in 1855. The Swinomish Reservation was expanded, in Skagit County, in 1873. The Tribe retains usufruct rights in areas ceded by Treaty. The Community has treaty fishing rights. Of the total 7,450 acre reservation, about 3,840 acres are held by non-Indians in fee status. The reservation population is estimated at 2,280 with 1,700 non-Indians residing. The Tribe is a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission. The Tribal Community is a member of the Skagit System Cooperative, which regulates and enhances fishing in the surrounding watershed

The Swinomish Indian Tribal Community is a sovereign unit that operates under a constitution ratified in 1936. The Swinomish accepted the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act. The governing body consists of 11 members are elected for 5 year terms to the Swinomish Indian Senate, and principal tribal officers are elected from within Senate ranks. The Senate oversees tribal assets, businesses, programs, and enforces ordinances for the 650 enrolled tribal members. It takes an active role in land use and environmental planning[13].

The Tulalips descended from tribes and bands from the central Puget Sound basin associated with Snohomish-Snoqualmie (Snoqualmoo)-Skykomish river systems. They signed the Treaty of Point Elliot in 1855, which called for all Indians living west of the Cascades to Puget Sound to be eventually removed to a common Snohomish Bay Reservation. The Tulalip Reservation, located in Snohomish county, expanded in 1873 by executive order. The Tribe retains fishing rights in areas ceded by Treaty, and are a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The Tulalip Confederation was established under the Wheeler Howard Act in 1935. The Confederation is made up of the Snohomish, Skykomish, Stillaguamish, Allied Bands, Duwamish, Sauk-Suiattle, and Upper Skagit Tribes. A 7 member Board of Directors are elected to 3 year terms[13].

Background Data:

The present day Upper Skagit Tribe descended from ancestors who lived among many villages on the Skagit, Sauk, Nookachamps, Baker, Cascade, and Samish Rivers along the Skagit River System and was signatory to the Point Elliot Treaty of 1855. The Tribe received formal Federal recognition in 1974. Reservation lands were established in 1981. The Tribe retains natural and cultural resource rights to areas ceded by Treaty. The Tribe is a member of the Skagit System Cooperative, which regulates and enhances fish and wildlife habitat for the three Skagit river system tribes, and is a member of the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission.

The 99 acre Upper Skagit Reservation, located within the boundaries of Skagit County, Washington, was established for the benefit of the approximately 600 enrolled Tribal members. A seven member Tribal Council serves staggered three year terms, with Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and Secretary elected annually by those present at the election.

The Tribe has been developing on-Reservation environmental management capacity since 1989. The Tribe has an Environmental Protection Code (adopted 1993) and environmental permitting system in place. The Tribe also has a Wellhead Protection Plan and is currently developing Zoning and Building Codes[15].

Background Data:

The Yakama tribe signed the Camp Stevens Yakima Treaty in 1855. Fourteen tribes and bands form the present Yakama Indian Nation, Sahaptin, Salish and Upper Chinookan/Wishram people from the lower and mid- Columbia regions Yakima, Klickitat, Wish-ham, Wenatshapam (Wenatchee), Palouse, Klinkuit, Kow-was-sayee, Li-ay-was, Skinpah, Sykks, Ochee-shotes, Kah-milt-pah, Se-ap-cat, Klinkuit, Columbea, Chelan, Entiat, Kittitas, Rock Creek, John Day and Celilo. The tribe retains fishing and water rights in territory ceded by Treaty, and participate in the Columbia River Inter-Tribal Fish Commission.

The 1,372,000 acre Yakama reservation, contains 247,000 acres in fee status, owned primarily by non-Indians. The Reservation covers the counties of Yakima, Klickitat, and Lewis. The Reservation population is estimated at 27,670 of which 21,360 are non-Indians.

The Yakamas rejected the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act, and formally organized their government in 1935. Fourteen representatives to the Business Council serve 4 year terms. Each of these positions represent one of the 14 bands and tribes of the Yakima Indian Nation. Every tribal enrollee over eighteen years of age is also included in a closely associated general council. The Confederated Tribes are a sovereign political entity and manage tribal property and assets, administer funds and programs and enforce ordinances on behalf their 8,000 enrolled tribal members[13].

Appendix II - GLOSSARY

Allotted Land - Formerly communal tribal reservation land divided under the Dawes Act for individual tribal members exclusive use.

Ceded Land - Land given to the U.S. by tribes under treaty.

Chiefs and headmen - Northwest tribes did not have heads of state in the manner of European governments. The "head chiefs" and "sub chiefs" who signed the treaties on behalf of tribes were picked by Stevens based on their friendliness, ability to communicate, and their apparent status. They were presumptively taken to represent other tribes as well.

Congressional Plenary Power - The broad power over Indian affairs including the ability to unilaterally alter treaties subject to procedural and constitutional limitations.

Consortium (Tribal) - A group of two or more Indian tribes.

Enrolled Tribal Members - Number of persons who are enrolled by the tribe as members thereof. Each tribe adopts its own enrollment eligibility rules and the rules vary markedly from tribe to tribe. Enrolled tribal members are commonly referred to simply as tribal members. Only tribal members can participate in tribal government.

Executive Order Reservation - Reservation established by the U.S. President (as distinct from those established under treaty.)

Federal Trust Responsibility - Responsibility owed tribes by reasoning of their dependent status established by treaty and other federal actions dating from treaty times.

Fee or Alienated Land - Usually on-reservation, allotted land removed from trust and sold in fee simple, usually to non-members without the federal government as trustees.

Governing body - The ability and body to carry out substantial governmental powers and duties.

Government Land - Tribal trust land used for B.I.A. purposes. Most reservations do not have this class of land.

Home rule - Municipal corporation and political subdivision. City or borough that has adopted a home rule charter, or it is a unified municipality. Home rule municipality has all legislative powers not prohibited by law or charter.

Indian Country - As indicated by 18 USC 1151.

- (a) All land within the limits of any Indian Reservation under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Government notwithstanding the issuance of any patent, and including rights of way running through the reservation.
- (b) All dependent Indian communities within the borders of the U.S. whether within the original or subsequently acquired territory thereof, and whether within or without the limits of a state, and
- (c) All Indian allotments, the Indian titles to which have not been extinguished including right of way running through them.

Oregon Country - In 1818-1845, Washington State was a part of "Oregon Country," a territory which by agreement, was subject to both U.S. and British occupation. In 1846 a treaty was agreed to which drew the international boundary as now exists between U.S. and Canada.

Organic Act - In 1848 the Organic Act established the Oregon Territory of the U.S. and provided that Indian lands would not be taken without their consent. In 1853, to accommodate western expansion and appease the growing number of settlers in the region, Congress created the Washington Territory.

Plenary - Congress's broad power over Indians. Congress's power to regulate commerce with foreign nation, among the several states and with Indian tribes. This non-absolute power may not impinge on the constitutional projections and guarantees enjoyed by Indian citizens.

Reservation - All land within the limits of any Indian reservation under the jurisdiction of the United States Government, notwithstanding the issuance of any patent, and including rights-of-way running through the reservation and recognized by the Secretary of Interior.

Restricted land - Land the title to which is held by an individual Indian or a Tribe and which can be alienated or encumbered by the owner only with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, because of limitations contained in the conveyance instrument pursuant to federal law or because of a federal law directly imposing limitations.

Sovereignty/Inherent Powers - Refers to the power lawfully vested in an Indian Tribe as a distinct, independent, political entity not extinguished by treaty or Congressional action. Tribes can adjudicate civil and criminal matters under their laws. They have the authority to levy taxes and to regulate land uses. Many have extensive water, hunting, and fishing rights, both within and outside reservation boundaries.

Stevens Treaties - Appointed as territorial governor, Isaac I. Steven, immediately addressed himself to the tasks of extinguishing Indian title to the land and at the same time, consolidating tribes on as few reservations as possible. The Donation Act of 1850 brought increasing settler pressure on the government to extinguish Indian land title.

Total Acreage - All land, regardless of ownership, within the exterior boundaries of the reservation.

Treaty - Highest level agreement between two or more sovereign nations.

Treaty Rights - Rights held by a tribe prior to treaty and preserved through treaty with the U.S.

Tribe - According to the definition in section 302(r). [A]ny Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community, including any Alaska Native village, which is Federally recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

Trust Land - Land or any interest in land the title to which is held in trust by the United States (federal government) for an individual Indian or Tribe, usually on-reservation.

Trust Responsibility - When the tribes ceded almost all their lands to the Federal Government, they received promises of federal protection for their land, natural resources and people from the BIA. These services include allowance of the Secretary of the Interior to review tribal ordinances, approve leases of reservation land, approve certain tribal loans and expenditures as well as provide education, health, another federal services.

Usufruct - The right to utilize and enjoy the profits and advantages of something belonging to another so long as the property is not damaged or altered.

Usual and Accustomed (U & A) - A treaty term used extensively in the U.S. vs. Washington, the case over which Judge Boldt presided, referring to areas where a particular tribe traditionally fished and over which the tribe had a territorial use claim.
