1.0 INTRODUCTION

This final report is presented in partial fulfillment of EPA contract 68-01-4145, Technical Service Area 1, Task 57. This final report is presented in two parts. Part I estimates the volume of demolition projects potentially subject to EPA asbestos regulations. Part I also estimates the cost of compliance for the demolition and renovation industry. Under separate cover, Part II provides a list of every demolition contractor who may be subject to EPA asbestos regulations.

This is Part II of the final report. It contains a list of approximately 2,300 individual U.S. firms who engage in demolition work.

1.1 Methodology for the Collection of Demolition and Renovation Firms

In establishing a list of every contractor subject to EPA reporting requirements, it was determined that the largest number of contractors would be included if TRC reviewed organization membership lists. Three major trade organizations were contacted for information about their membership lists. The organizations were:

- o The National Association of Demolition Contractors
4415 West Harrison St.
Hillside, Illinois 312-449-5959
- o The Asbestos Information Association
Arlington, Virginia 703-971-1150
- o The Wrecking and Salvage Journal, Inc.
14 Wood Road
Braintree, Massachusetts 617-848-6150

Both the National Association of Demolition Contractors and the Asbestos Information Association obtain mailing lists from the New York based mailing list firm of Zeller and Letica, 15 East 26th Street, New York, New York 10010 (212-MU5-7512). The Wrecking and Salvage Journal maintains its own mailing list of subscribers.

The mailing list from The Wrecking and Salvage Journal, Inc. contained approximately 3,000 individual addresses. Better than ten percent of the mailing labels were advertising agencies, large industrial concerns, libraries, and antique dealers. Because of the large percent of non-industry firms on this list, TRC obtained a mailing list from Zeller and Letica. This list contained 2,502 names. Firms that are included in this list must earn at least fifty-one percent of their gross incomes from the demolition of buildings. After reviewing the Zeller and Letica list, there were 221 firms that were questionable. After checking with the firms in question, 205 were dropped from the list, leaving 2297 firms that engage in demolition projects. The fifty-one percent criteria is also required for membership in the National Association of Demolition Contractors. Those listed by Zeller and Letica were used to derive approximate statistics. Puerto Rico and Guam do not appear on the following list. A similar list for renovation contractors could contain up to forty percent of firms not associated with asbestos removal.

1.2 Distribution of Contractors

Table 1 is the breakdown of the number of demolition contractors by EPA Regions. Table 1 shows that Regions II, V and IX contain the largest number of contractors (316, 524 and 304 respectively). These three Regions account for 49.8% of all contractors in the United States.

TABLE 1

Within the three Regions (II, V, and IX), we find the most contractors in the states with large population centers, and/or heavy industrial development. Table 2 is the number of contractors by state within the three Regions.

A perusal of Table 2 will show that the more industrial states in Regions II, V and IX have the most contractors.

Table 3 is the number of contractors by state within Region. This table contains the relative rank of each state in regard to the number of demolition contractors. A review of the ten states with the most contractors shows that these states have an abundance of heavy industry. The ten states are: California, New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Texas, Florida, Ohio, Michigan, and Indiana. These states account for 57.1% (1,312 contractors) of all contractors in the United States.
