FOREWORD

In recent years, there has been a growing awareness that the quality of the air in residential, commercial, and public buildings is not always as healthful as it should be. Health and comfort effects can result from a broad array of pollutants when they build up in indoor air spaces, often to higher levels than found outside, due to inadequate ventilation or particularly strong sources of pollution. Such contamination often derives from lifestyle factors like smoking, building materials and furnishings, everyday products used in homes and businesses, and even infiltration of natural pollutants like radon from the ground.

In most states, as well as at the federal level, indoor air quality issues are dealt with by a variety of agencies with the authority or expertise to focus on a particular problem or set of problems. Regardless of whether states have a centralized indoor air program, responsibility for many indoor air issues remains dispersed among several different state agencies. As a result, finding the appropriate state contact is often a difficult and frustrating experience. This directory is intended to make it easier to find the right contact.

The Directory of State Indoor Air Quality Contacts was produced as part of a cooperative agreement between the United States Environmental Protection Agency and the Public Health Foundation, which was founded by the Association of State and Territorial Health Officials to conduct research and provide support to state health agencies. The multi-year cooperative agreement, which began in 1985 to help states implement delegated authorities, was expanded in 1987 to include work on state activities relating to indoor air quality.

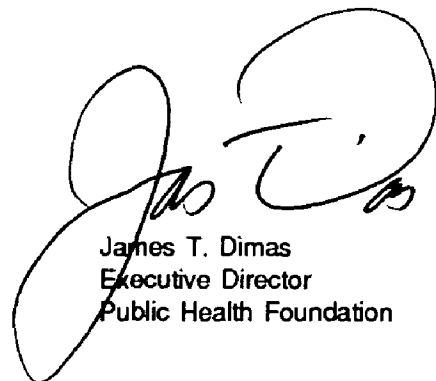

We would like to thank the state agency personnel who took time to verify the information contained in the directory. In addition, substantial assistance was provided by:

Ms. Betsy Agle, United States Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Air and Radiation

INTRODUCTION

This directory is a guide to locating individuals in state government who can provide information and assistance on indoor air quality problems. For the first time, it brings together information on more than 16 issues, from asbestos to wood preservatives, for the range of agencies involved in addressing those issues, from health agencies to energy departments.

The information contained in the directory is organized alphabetically by state. For each state, the directory lists the various agencies and their divisions, followed by a listing of individual contact names and telephone numbers organized by type of indoor air pollutant or problem. Since agencies often have individuals from different divisions working on indoor air quality issues, we have listed the division with the contact name to clarify which divisions may be associated with particular issues. Agencies or divisions with primary responsibility for a particular area are marked with an asterisk; otherwise, the order in which agencies, divisions, and contacts are listed is without implication regarding degree of authority.

NOTES AND DEFINITIONS

BIOLOGICALS include bacteria, molds and mildew, viruses, animal dander and cat saliva, mites, cockroaches and pollen.

BUILDING COMPLAINT INVESTIGATIONS attempt to determine and remedy the source of building health complaints sometimes referred to as 'sick building syndrome.' Among the many factors which a building investigation may examine are the ventilation system, chemical and biological pollutants, building materials and furnishings, thermal conditions such as temperature and humidity, and record of occupant health complaints.

COMBUSTION DEVICES include unvented kerosene and gas space heaters, wood stoves, fireplaces and gas stoves.

COMBUSTION GASES include both particulates and gases such as carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, oxides of nitrogen, sulfur oxides, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, hydrocarbons, automobile exhaust, and gasoline and diesel fumes.

TERMITICIDES/CHLORDANE include all pesticides used currently or in the past to kill termites.

WOOD PRESERVATIVES include creosote, pentachlorophenol, and copper chromated arsenate (CCA).
