Community Water Systems Selected for Sampling

EPA has selected over 500 community water systems for sampling as part of the National Pesticide Survey. The systems are statistically representative of 51,000 community water systems that use ground water as a source of drinking water. None of the systems was selected on the basis of any knowledge or suspicion of pollution problems. The complete list of selected community water systems is presented below.

Samples from community water system wells will be analyzed for over 100 pesticides. In most States sampling will be conducted by officials from the State agency with primary responsibility for water supply. The sampling will begin in August 1988 and will continue through December 1989. About 230 community wells are scheduled to be sampled by the end of December 1988.

The community water system list was developed through a series of steps that were needed to ensure that systems with more than one well would be adequately represented. First, using an original list of 51,000 community water systems, EPA randomly selected a subset of about 7,000 systems. These systems were then screened by telephone to determine the number of wells in operation at each system. Finally, about 600 community water system wells were randomly selected. The final list of about 600 system wells represents a total of 540 systems. At 23 systems, more than one well will be sampled; at the remaining systems, only one well will be sampled.

Sampling of community water systems will be evenly spread out over the entire Survey period. This schedule will ensure that no possible biases due to seasonal variations are introduced into the sampling results. The sampling schedule will also take into account laboratory capacity for analyzing the samples, State schedules and available resources to carry out the sampling and data collection activities.

To ensure consistency across States in the sampling protocols used, EPA will conduct a series of training sessions to instruct the State personnel in the NPS sampling protocols, quality assurance requirements, and NPS questionnaires prior to the first round of sampling in each State.

It should be noted that the Survey results are not intended to provide any assessment of drinking water well quality on a Statewide basis. A much larger survey would be necessary to provide such an assessment for each State. However, when the sampling results for the selected community systems are taken as a whole, they will provide a national estimate of pesticides in drinking water wells. Exhibit 1 provides a summary of the number of community water system wells to be sampled in each State and Region.
