OWNER'S MANUAL

These Constituency Profiles have been prepared for the Office of Public Awareness of the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) by the Northwest Regional Foundation of Spokane, Washington as an aide in communicating with the various organizations in Region 10 which are affected by EPA activities. The views expressed herein, except those attributed to individual organizations, are those of the preparer and do not necessarily correspond to those of the EPA. This Owner's Manual is intended to be a guide for users of these profiles. It will explain how the profiles were compiled, how they are organized, and how they might be used.

HOW THEY WERE COMPILED

EPA requested that we develop profiles of organizations in nine constituency areas. These areas are Agriculture, Business and Industry, Environment, Labor, Minorities, Public Interest, Urban, Women, and Youth. Our first step in preparing these profiles was to compile a list of the organizations in each constituency group in Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, the four states which comprise Region 10. In some cases, this was a fairly easy task. For instance, the State Department of Agriculture in Washington had a very complete list of the agricultural organizations in the state. This was generally true in each of the states for Agriculture, Business and Industry, Labor, and Environment. However, to the best of our knowledge, ours was the first attempt to assemble comprehensive lists of Minority, Urban, Women, and Youth organizations in each of the states. There has been no previous effort to compile any sort of list of Public Interest groups in the Region.

As a result, there are probably gaps in some of the lists. For instance, in Washington, we obtained lists of women's organizations from the Women's Resource Center in Spokane, the Seattle Office of Women's Rights, and the U.S. Department of Labor in its Directory for Reaching Minority and Women's Groups. Although we were told by several women's organizations that these were the most complete lists available, it seems to us that they can not contain all the Women's groups in the state. However, while we have inevitably missed some organizations in each of the constituency groups, this effort provides a starting point for any further expansion of the lists.

Once we had these lists in hand, we developed a questionnaire to be mailed to all the organizations that we had identified in each of the states. It requested basic information about each organization, such as phone number, contact person, number of members, main focus, and how it communicates with its members. Additionally, the questionnaire asked for information about the organization's environmental concerns. We also asked for their environmental priorities, any issues on which they had taken positions, a statement of EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed, and which, if any, of EPA program areas they would like to receive information about. A copy of the questionnaire is attached.

We mailed out a total of 3400 questionnaires: 470 in Alaska, 680 in Idaho, 975 in Oregon, and 1270 in Washington. A follow-up letter to all groups and phone calls to key organizations brought in 548 responses for a total response rate of 15.9%. This breaks down to 63 or 12.1% from Alaska, 139 or 20.1% from Idaho, 145 or 15.0% from Oregon, and 201 or 15.9% from Washington.

Once we had all the responses, we began to list them in the standard format of the individual profiles. This includes the name of the organization, its address and contact person, how it communicates with its members, organizational information, environmental priorities, and those EPA program areas about which it would like to be informed. We have also left space on the profiles for additional comments after "Further Contacts". In some cases, we summarized responses to make them easier to read, but in all cases, we maintained the original content and often quoted from the questionnaire directly.

Finally, we developed an introduction to each constituency group in each state. It was created through "facts and figures" research, phone calls to key leaders in each constituency group, and by summarizing the questionnaire responses.

HOW THE PROFILES ARE ORGANIZED

The profiles are divided into four volumes: one each for Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. These four volumes are further divided into nine separate sections, each corresponding to one of the nine constituency groups. These sections are arranged alphabetically, and each one contains:

1. An introduction to each constituency group which describes its characteristics, summarizes the environmental concerns of its members, and gives some ideas about how EPA might go about improving communication with members of that group.
2. An alphabetical index of those organizations which responded to our questionnaire and the page within the section where their profiles can be found.
3. The "Profiles" themselves: the condensed and formatted responses from each organization.
4. A cross-reference of organizations from other constituency groups which also consider themselves to be part of this group.
5. A mailing list of the organizations which were identified in that constituency group.

HOW TO USE THESE PROFILES

Included in these profiles are every organization that we could discover in the nine constituency groups in each state, a total of nearly 3500. They range from the Portland Urban Indian Council to Rural Alaska Community Action, and from the Spokane YWCA to the Idaho Outdoor Association. As the comments of organizations which responded to our questionnaire reveal, many organizations in Region 10 have little or no direct interest in EPA and its activities. Their interests and those of the EPA simply do not coincide.

Additionally, many of these same organizations have no clear idea of what EPA is and what it does. EPA thus gets the blame or credit for activities of the U.S. Forest Service, the various state departments of ecology, the U.S. Department of Energy, and the federal court system. Thus, in order to improve communication with many organizations, EPA faces a formidable task of educating them to its purposes and to a lesser extent those of other state and federal agencies. While we have suggested in our introductions to several of these constituencies that this may be the best way to improve communication, it remains up to the EPA to determine if such an effort is justified.

As a starting point for communicating with organizations in Region 10, these profiles do several things:

1. They identify who's out there. As we mentioned above, these profiles do not contain every organization in the Region, but they do contain the most important ones and are probably the most comprehensive such listing available. They enable EPA to know who its constituents are. If an even more detailed listing of these constituents proves to be desirable, these lists provide a point from which to begin a more detailed compilation.

2. They are a start at identifying which of these organizations are concerned about the EPA and the environment. Those organizations which responded to our questionnaire are the ones most likely to be interested in public hearings, changes in EPA regulations, or entering into a dialogue on environmental protection. Furthermore, the profiles not only report the main environmental concerns (whether or not they are EPA's responsibility) of each organization and constituency group, they also identify specifically which EPA program areas they are interested in. This gives EPA an idea of who to approach about a specific issue.

3. The profiles, finally, provide a format which can be expanded as more organizations interested in EPA activities are identified. Both at the end of each individual profile, and at the end of each constituency group, room has been left for additional comments and for the inclusion of additional organizations. Thus, these profiles can grow to include the changing and growing list of organizations interested in EPA.

SUMMARY

These profiles were prepared as a tool for EPA to use in communicating with organizations in Region 10. It is our belief that the first step in communicating with another is to understand her/his perceptions and beliefs, to learn to see the world through her/his eyes. These profiles attempt to do this by recording the perceptions of organizations throughout the Region. Many of these viewpoints are critical of EPA and its activities. It is not our intent in preparing these profiles to endorse or validate this criticism -- the views expressed in the profiles of individual organizations are those of the organization profiled and do not necessarily correspond to those of the preparer. Rather we have sought to record these viewpoints accurately so that EPA can know which organizations or constituency groups would like to see it be more active, which less active, and which aren't at all sure what it does. These perceptions can thus inform any efforts EPA may wish to make to improve communication with these organizations.

Further, in our introduction to each of the constituency groups, we have provided whatever background seemed relevant to understanding the concerns and viewpoints of these organizations. Additionally, each concludes with a recommendation about what EPA might do to improve communication with this group. These opinions are our own and do not necessarily reflect EPA thinking or future plans. We do hope, however, that these suggestions and the information contained in these profiles will be useful to EPA in whatever efforts it undertakes to communicate with the organizations which make up its constituency in Region 10.

AGRICULTURE

OREGON AGRICULTURE

We have identified about 100 agricultural organizations in the State of Oregon. They are primarily associations of producers who are actively involved in farming and ranching. This introduction to the Agriculture constituency group in Oregon presents a general overview of the role of agriculture in the Oregon economy as well as a summary of the problems facing farmers. It then lists the main environmental concerns of farmers as expressed by representatives of agricultural organizations in phone interviews and questionnaire responses.

Agriculture has traditionally been a major contributor to the Oregon economy, and the relatively recent development of food processing as a major manufacturing industry has served to broaden its impact. Taken together, agriculture and food processing now constitute Oregon's second largest industry with a total impact on the economy estimated at over $3 billion a year. Approximately 30% of Oregon's land area, 19,200,000 acres is devoted to agriculture. Of this area, about 14 million acres are used for range or pasture land with the remaining 5 million in crops.

Three characteristics of agriculture in Oregon should be noted. First, agricultural activity is not isolated in one area of the state. The top counties in farm marketing for 1977 were Marion, Malheur, Umatilla, Linn, Clackamas, Morrow, Washington, Yamhill, Klamath, and Lane. Similarly, although the larger ranches are east of the Cascade Mountains, beef cattle can be found in all parts of the state. Consequently, the concerns of agriculture are important in most sections of the state.

Second, Oregon is not a one crop state. It ranks second nationally to California with over 100 different commodities being produced. The top ten crops in dollar value for 1977 were hay, wheat, potatoes, peppermint, ryegrass seed, all kinds of pears, onions, snap beans, sweet corn, and barley. Additionally, 34.5% of the total farm receipts are from livestock and dairy products.

Third, many farms in Oregon are family-run operations. Estimates of the number of farms in the state vary from 27,000 to 34,000, about 80% of which are 500 acres or less. Thus, the problems facing small farms are of great concern to Oregon agriculture.

Oregon farmers share many of the problems and frustrations felt by farmers across the country. They feel that their needs are not given proper consideration especially in light of the significance of agriculture's contribution to the economy. Among the primary concerns listed by farmers and ranchers are the availability of chemicals for controlling pests and weeds, the preservation of land for agriculture, the need for water resources for irrigation, and labor problems with migrant laborers. Obviously, most of these are directly related to environmental issues and the EPA.

Many farmers and ranchers feel that they were the original environmentalists. Long before ecology became fashionable, they were concerned with protecting the land and water resources upon which they depend for their livelihood. Over the years, resentment among agriculturalists has mounted as environmentalists, who are perceived as unaware of or insensitive to the problems of agriculture, called for restrictive regulations in the name of an environment that farmers have long cared for and sought to protect. Much of this resentment focuses on what is seen as interference by governmental agencies. Common complaints about OSHA, the Department of Agriculture, and the EPA are that they are out of touch with the real situation and that their regulations are costly and unnecessary.

The controversy over the use of herbicides and pesticides is a case in point. Many farmers, cattle owners, and lumber interests are angry about EPA's ban on the use of some of these sprays because they are left with no substitutes or alternatives. They criticize the research that has been done and argue that decisions about pesticide use have been made on the basis of irrational arguments of environmentalists and have not taken the real needs of farmers into account.

The availability of water is another major concern for agricultural interests. The use of irrigation has contributed to increased agricultural productivity particularly in Umatilla and Morrow counties. Presently, 1,850,000 acres are irrigated with long term plans to irrigate an additional one million acres in the Willamette Valley and 800,000 acres in the Columbia River counties. The catch is that certain regulations governing the depth of water in reservoirs designated for recreational use and for wildlife streams severely limit the water available for irrigation.

We received twelve responses to our questionnaires from agricultural organizations. The majority of these were from "traditional" agricultural groups such as the Central Oregon Hay Growers Association or the Agri-Business Council of Oregon. Their concerns closely reflect the above stated problems facing agriculture. They worry that agriculturalists will soon be unable to produce food and fibre profitably. Since they see EPA and other governmental bodies as contributing to their costs, they will continue to oppose any regulations which seem to interfere with their ability to operate profitably. Because of the impact environmental regulations have had on agriculture, these organizations are better informed than most constituency groups about EPA and its activities. Therefore, the task is not so much in reaching them as it is to insure that they feel "heard" by EPA in the process of creating regulations that will affect agriculture.

In addition, there is another and much smaller segment of the agricultural constituency. These are the alternative agriculture organizations which support organic farming and a decentralized agricultural system. Their attitudes towards the environment are often markedly different from those traditional agricultural organizations. They tend to be supportive of EPA's efforts to protect the environment and often wish that EPA were stricter in its regulations of pesticides and other sources of pollution.

There is no single organization that represents all the agricultural interests in the state. There are, however, several like the Farm Bureau, the Grange, the Farmer's Union, the National Farmer's Organization, and the Agri-Business Council that do reach large segments of the agriculture community and which would enable EPA to distribute information to a large portion of this constituency. In addition, there are the commodity commissions and associations which include most of this constituency group and which would enable the EPA to reach virtually every segment of the agriculture community. However, as this constituency is already relatively well informed about EPA activities, EPA's real challenge will be not merely to provide information to these groups but to insure that agricultural organizations feel that their problems and concerns are considered by EPA as it prepares regulations that impact agriculture. The creation of a real dialogue between EPA and agricultural interests is needed to help both parties become aware of the problems and concerns of the other.

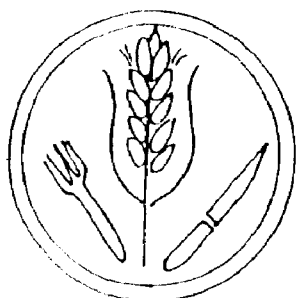

On the following page is an alphabetical list of those agricultural organizations that responded to our questionnaire. It, in turn, is followed by the profiles themselves.

Communication Tools	"ABC Update" (newsletter) ABC Annual Report
Organizational Information	This organization operates on the state level with approximately 500 members. Its focus is on educating "the general public about the importance of agriculture to the economic well-being of Oregon and to help create a better understanding between rural and urban communities as well as the agricultural and business sectors of Oregon."
Environmental Concerns	"Agricultural people are environmentally conscious by the nature of their business. However, we do support them when there is a threat to that industry where tools that keep them in business would be taken from them without valid reasons or feasible alternatives." The council does not take stands on many issues because of the diverse interests of its membership. "However, issues that affect all of agriculture such as chemicals, etc. are the exception, but a stand takes approval from our board of directors."

BUSINESS

OREGON BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

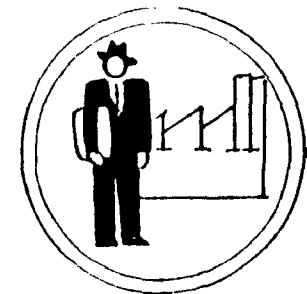

We have identified approximately 175 business and industrial organizations in Oregon. These are not individual businesses but rather associations of businesses in a given field such as the Western Forest Industries Association or the Portland Board of Realtors. This introduction to the Business and Industry Constituency in Oregon presents an overview of the important industries in Oregon, with a special emphasis on lumbering, followed by a summary of the environmental concerns of those associations.

Environmental concerns and regulations are a particularly sensitive subject for Oregon's business interests. A look at the state's economy explains why the environment is such a potent issue. Oregon's top 3 industries are lumber/wood products, agriculture/food processing, and tourism, in that order. All three depend directly or indirectly on the sound management of the environment and the state's natural resources. In our research, lumber/wood products has been dealt with in this business section while food processing has been considered an agricultural activity.

Forestry and forest products constitute the largest sector of the Oregon economy. With 24.9 million acres of commercial forest land, Oregon has been the nation's top lumbering state since 1938. There are two forest regions in Oregon, the Douglas Fir region of western Oregon and the Western Pine in eastern Oregon. Eighteen counties located throughout the state depend on lumber and wood products for over 50% of their manufacturing employment. Another 5 million acres of forest land are designated for recreational use and water production, giving Oregon over 29.9 million acres of forest land - about 1/2 the land area of the state. Industrial manufacture of lumber produced $1,492,000,000 in 1976 with another $3,761,000,000 worth of goods coming from forest-based plants, while 38.6% of manufacturing employment lies in the lumber and wood products industries.

Most of the lumber goes to construction activity which explains why the national economic situation has become a number one concern for Oregon Business interests. The effect of higher interest rates on the housing market has had a particularly negative effect on the Oregon Lumber Industry.

A second major problem facing Oregon's lumber industry is the projected shortage of timber. A study done by Oregon State University for the Oregon State Board of Forestry recently concluded that "(h)arvest projections predict a serious shortage in the state before the year 2000 under present management policies." Since approximately 61% of Oregon's forest lands are managed by public agencies like the U.S. Forest Service, the use of these lands to lessen the impact of the timber shortage promises to be a major issue.

Given these problems, environmental regulations that can be seen as interfering with lumbering practices only add fuel to the fire. The timber industry has looked at environmental protection as a two-edged sword. On one hand, environmental protection of forest lands is vital to the continuation of the lumber supply. However, when these controls hamper an already suffering industry, tempers flare. For example, during the last five years, Oregon has experienced the worst series of forest insect epidemics in recorded history. Consequently, EPA's banning of certain herbicides and pesticides has been seen as threatening the already failing lumber supplies by robbing owners of a tool with which to combat these pests. Agricultural interests have joined with timber interests to oppose these bannings.

A number of other industries make significant contributions to the state's economy. Although exact figures are hard to come by, tourist expenditures in Oregon were estimated to be well over $800 million in 1978 while the mining and fishing industries combined contribute about $156 million annually to the state's economy. The fastest growing sectors of manufacturing are the high technology industries, primarily electronics or computer-related durable goods.

The Associated Oregon Industries represents most of the state's industries. They see the prime problems facing Oregon businesses as: the role of economic development as a criterion in land use planning; issues affecting energy supplies; the Employment Stabilization Act of 1981 (relating to plant closures); and litter, packaging, and recycling requirements. In regard to the EPA, the industries object whenever environmental regulations seem to infringe on their profits or their potential for economic growth. Furthermore, because of the timber industry's influence on the cash flow in Oregon, many non-timber industries are vitally concerned with regulations that might affect the timber industry.

The responses that we got to our questionnaire from business associations reflect the above statements. These groups generally disagreed with EPA positions such as: efforts to limit pesticide spraying, banning 2,4,5-T, restrictions on field and slash burning, and auto emission controls. However, several did express support for EPA's acceptance of the Oregon Forest Practices Act. As is true with most groups, the Business and Industry Constituency is knowledgeable about those regulations that impact them but not about other EPA activities. Generally, however, they oppose EPA's efforts or, as stated by one group: "EPA efforts should be to have goals reasonable, not extreme. Costs and efforts should be weighted against the actual percentage of improvement which is attainable."

Because their membership includes many of Oregon's major industries, Associated Oregon Industries is a key to reaching business organizations in the state. It represents business interests on many issues including environmental ones. Other groups could be contacted on those issues that directly relate to their areas of concern. For example, Oregon Automobile Dealers Association might be contacted about hearings related to or changes in auto emissions standards. However, the main frustration expressed by a number of business groups is not a lack of information from EPA but rather a lack of avenues for meaningful input into the decisions being made by the Agency. The development of methods for creating productive dialogues with business groups is a major challenge facing EPA.

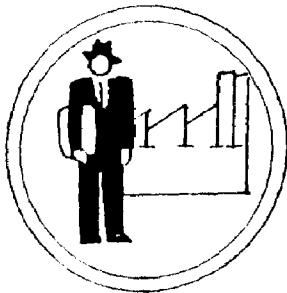

On the following page is an Index of the Business and Industry organizations that responded to our questionnaire. This list is followed by the profile of each organization prepared from these responses.

Contact Person	Robert L. Darnedde, Executive Director Donald P. Dobson, M.D., President Edward Press, M.D., Chairman Public Health and Safety Committee Karen Whitaker
Communication Tools	"Oregon Medical Association Newsletter"
Organizational Information	"The Oregon Medical Association is a professional organization serving licensed physicians in the State of Oregon." They have approximately 3500 members, all of whom are either M.D.'s or Doctors of Osteopathy.
Environmental Concerns	"The OMA recognizes its responsibility in the coordination of available medical and related scientific environmental consultants and others in the areas of air, water, radiation, sound, solid waste and toxic chemicals." They have encouraged research in developing screening tests for heavy metals, organic contaminants associated with galvanized pipe, investigating the severity and extent of health problems associated with galvanized pipe, and will make this information available to the Governor and citizens of Oregon. The Association has agreed with the EPA curtailment of open field burning, adequate, realistic air pollution standards, and recommendations relative to the reasonable safety and relative lack of hazards of the Trojan Nuclear Plant. They have disagreed with the EPA on the funding of pollution control measures.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Water Quality, Toxic Substances, Solid Waste, Noise, Pesticides, Radiation, and Drinking Water.

Organizational
Information

The Association is a locally-based organization interested in forestry, air and water quality, and the local economic situation. It has "...175 member firms consisting of sawmills, plywood and veneer plants, loggers, road builders, service and supply companies which do business with the timber industry in Jackson and Josephine Counties in Oregon."

Environmental Concerns

The forest land base, air and water quality, and the use of forest management tools, such as herbicides, fire, fertilization and genetics are the environmental concerns of this organization. They have taken positions on the Elk Creek Dam, the Jackson County Comprehensive Plan Elements, the Jackson County P.U.D., herbicide use, RARE II, and the Crater Lake National Park Addition. They agree with the EPA's recent position relative to 2,4-D. They do not agree with the EPA's suspension of 2,4,5-T and with their proposed rules for visibility impairment.

Contact Person	Steele Barnett, Forest Counsel
Communication Tools	"Conservation Observer" (newsletter) "Proceedings of the Annual Western Forestry Conference"
Organizational	The Association has approximately 600 members including forest landowners, managers, researchers, and educators. Its primary focus is on forest management and utilization, and it is active locally.
Environmental Concerns	This organization is concerned with issues that have an impact on forest management and utilization such as regulations on air quality and pesticide use. "Official positions are taken through resolutions submitted to the membership. One major issue we have addressed is the need to keep prescribed burning as a forest management tool. Another is the need for aerial applications of herbicides. We also made suggestions for the allocations of forest land uses as considered on RARE II and in Wilderness bills." They agree with EPA's actions relative to toxic substances disposal, and support EPA's acceptance of the Oregon Forest Practices Act as meeting the requirement of Section 208 of the Clean Water Act. They disagreed with EPA cancellation of the registration of 2,4,5-T on "inadequate evidence" and with cancellation of the registration of DDT on "inadequate evidence."
EPA Program Areas of Concern	Air Quality, Water Quality, and Pesticides.

ENVIRONMENT

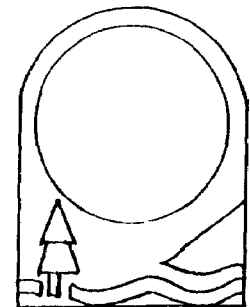

OREGON ENVIRONMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

We have identified approximately 200 environmental organizations in Oregon. They range in size from the 25 member Parkrose High School Environmental Action Club to the 2800 member Audubon Society of Portland, and in focus from Trout Unlimited to the Solar Data Gathering Network. What they have in common is a concern about protecting the environment. This introduction to the Oregon Environmental Constituency will present a brief summary of the role environmental groups have played in Oregon, potential directions for their future, and some of their major concerns in relation to the EPA.

Oregon has often been cited as one of the most, if not the most, progressive state in regards to environmental protection. It was the first state to adopt clean air and water laws, to ban throw-away bottles, among the first to develop state-wide land use planning, restrict commercial beach development, and adopt scenic river regulations. Aerosol sprays were outlawed in Oregon two years before the federal government took steps to end sales nationally. Some of this can be attributed to the fact that the state's top three industries (timber, agriculture, and tourism) depend directly or indirectly on the state's natural resources. However, a large amount of the credit must go to the effective work of environmental groups in the state.

The Oregon Environmental Council, established in 1968, was the first major environmental group in the state. It came to national attention with the passage of the "Bottle Bill" in the 1970's. Since that time it has continued to work with a number of environmental groups on a variety of issues. Safe drinking water, energy conservation, development of alternative energy sources, and tax disincentives for land speculation are some of the issues they are presently undertaking. A number of other environmental groups have surfaced throughout the state. Many of them are concerned with specific environmental problems such as land use, appropriate technology, and the regulation of herbicide and pesticide use. This type of specialization is indicative of recent developments among environmental groups in Oregon.

Opinions differ as to the future of environmental groups in Oregon. Some observers believe that the success and continued existence of many environmental groups has helped to dispel the notion that ecology is a passing fad. Industry representatives, weary of yearly battles on environmental issues, have shown an increased willingness to recognize and work with environmentalists towards constructive solutions to environmental problems. However, the continuous battles environmental groups wage are a great drain on the volunteer support which sustain their continued momentum. Additionally, some observers believe that the increased specialization of environmental groups will dilute their impact. These two factors have caused some to question whether environmental groups will be able to maintain their impetus in the 1980's. The country's increasingly conservative shift and apparent rejection of environmental safeguards makes this question even more significant.

Based on their responses to our questionnaire, environmental organizations are more knowledgeable about EPA and its activities than are members of other constituency groups. Their environmental concerns are quite wide, ranging from the protection of wildlife habitat to opposition to nuclear energy, from recycling to field burning. Many of these concerns fall outside EPA's area of responsibility. However, the most frequently mentioned concerns for which EPA is responsible are the control of pesticide and herbicide use, the protection of wildlife, and improving air quality.

These organizations have tended to have more contact with EPA than do members of other constituency groups, but not as much as one might expect as only 7 of the 31 groups that responded to our questionnaire had been in touch with EPA. They are almost unanimously supportive of EPA efforts to protect the environment but are often critical of EPA for not going far enough in these efforts. They want the EPA to be more aggressive, both in the formulation and enforcement of environmental regulations.

There is no single group that represents the interests of all the environmental organizations in Oregon. The Oregon Environmental Council continues to be influential and can reach or identify a large percentage of the environmental groups in the state. However, the most efficient way to communicate with these groups is on an issue by issue basis. Such an approach would enable environmental groups to get information only on those issues they are interested in and would limit the number of groups EPA would have to contact on each issue.

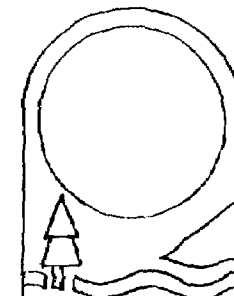

What follows is an alphabetical index of environmental groups which responded to our questionnaires. It is in turn followed by the profiles themselves.

Environmental
Concerns

Their environmental priorities are waste reduction and waste reclamation. They develop a legislative program each year. Last year's "success" was SB 925 of the Oregon Legislature. They also monitor and advise the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality and The U.S. EPA activities. They have supported EPA action on Oregon landfill permits, landfill inventory rules and the development of hazardous waste facility guidelines. They are critical of the EPA/DEQ work plan and with the slowness in RCRA rule promulgation. They also disagree with "EPA support of chemical industry position on superfund landfill bill."

Organizational Information	This organization has 25 members and is active on a state and local level. Its primary focus is on the conservation of resources on public lands.
Environmental Concerns	The Council is concerned with the preservation of wilderness areas and roadless areas and with enhancing the environment in general. Members of the Council have testified in favor of visibility enhancement in Class I areas and against field burning and slash burning which degrade the visibility resource. They also testified in opposition to RARE II proposals of Forest Service which they thought were too restrictive in the amount of wilderness areas proposed. They have agreed with EPA regulation of pesticides and herbicides and with tough regulation of visibility in Class I areas. They also support EPA control of non point sources of water pollution. They disagreed with EPA for approval of field burning in Oregon, approval of slash burning in national Forests, and approval of herbicide spraying.

Organizational Information	This organization is based nationally in Washington. D.C. It is setting up a few experimental chapters for state and regional operations, but these will probably not be in the Northwest for some time. The primary focus of this organization is on wildlife and wildlife habitats. In the Northwest, this means interest in grazing, forestry, animal damage control, pesticides and marine mammals. They have approximately 50,000 members nationwide.
Environmental Concerns	The major concerns of this organization are "(M)aintaining a diversity of animal and plant life in viable natural ecosystems...(k)eeping those ecosystems free of contamination of all sorts...(d)eveloping and implementing integrated pest management." They support alternatives to pesticides/herbicides, retention of old growth forests, the Marine mammal Protection Act/Endangered Species Act, and "Full Force and Effect" in BLM implementation of grazing reduction. They oppose the use of poison and leghold traps in controlling animal damage. They have agreed with the EPA's position on 2,4,5-T, with their comments on DEIS USFWS ADC (Animal Damage Control), and with the suspension of heptachlor/chlorodane. They have not agreed with EPA's permission for the application of 1080 poison by aircraft, indiscriminate rodent poisoning, and with the unclear position on registration of lithium chloride in coyote control.

Organizational
Information

This organization is a coalition of approximately 27 groups in Oregon, Idaho, Washington and California. It operates on the local, state, and regional levels to coordinate of both strategies and information for groups throughout the Northwest working in opposition to herbicide spraying on forest lands.

Environmental
Concerns

"In the area of herbicides, we are very concerned about better regulation in the actual use and application of chemicals. We are working to help educate the public as well as various government and private agencies about the potential danger to their health as well as the obvious dangers to the environment." They were involved last year as intervenors on behalf of the EPA in the cancellation hearings of 2,4,5-T and Silvex. They intervened to insure that evidence from people who live and work in the areas where 2,4,5-T and Silvex are applied was heard. They agreed with EPA's emergency suspension of 2,4,5-T, and DBCp and with their RPAR of Aldrin/Dieldrin. They have disagreed with the EPA's latest conclusions on the herbicide 2,4,D, with their failure to proceed against phenoxies generically, and with their failure to exercise oversight authority on pesticide use.

Organizational Information	The Center is active on a state and regional level. Its emphasis is on environmental education focussing on university and community outreach programs.
Environmental Concerns	The major concern of this organization is the use and development of energy and natural resources that do not lessen the quality of ;the environment. In this regard, they focus on energy (conservation, alternatives, coal/nuclear expansion), toxic substances, air and water pollution, and forestry/wilderness preservation. They have taken a position on land use planning issues in the Eugene-Springfield general metropolitan area. Additionally they have opposed expansion of the University of Oregon parking lot along the Willamette Greenway, the sale of non-returnable plastic milk bottles in Oregon, and the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee bill on Alaskan lands.

LABOR

OREGON LABOR

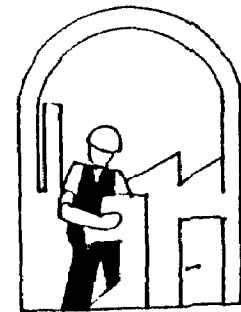

We have identified approximately one hundred labor organizations in Oregon. This is by no means an exhaustive list of every local union in the State. Instead, it includes the State AFL-CIO headquarters, the Labor Councils of the various counties in the state, and the principle Portland unions. This list could be easily expanded to include the various locals in each county if this proves desirable. This introduction to the Labor Constituency in Oregon will briefly look at the extent of unionization in the state, the environmental concerns expressed by the various unions we contacted, and approaches to improving communications with them.

Approximately 25% of Oregon's 1,200,000 workers are union members. These are primarily concentrated in timbering and related manufacturing, the construction industry, and transportation. As with unions everywhere, their prime concern is with protecting the jobs of their members. Thus, a great deal of their energy recently has been put into an effort to get the state legislature to pass a Plant Closure Bill which would require major employers to give their employees and communities in which they are located a year's notice before they could close their facilities.

This concern for protecting the jobs of their members has given many unionists a dim view of environmental protection. Because so much of the Oregon economy is based on lumbering and the forest products industry, any efforts by EPA or other governmental agencies to regulate it are often seen as a threat to workers. Thus, many of them are skeptical of EPA efforts at environmental protection. This was reflected in the responses we received to our questionnaires. Several unions listed a "balance between jobs and the environment" as their prime environmental concern.

However, even more respondents were unable to comment upon EPA actions or state any real environmental concerns. Typical of these unions was one which stated that environmental issues were "not realistically one of their priority matters". In fact, only one of the fourteen unions which responded to our questionnaires was able to mention a specific EPA action with which it agreed or disagreed.

Despite this general lack of knowledge of the EPA and its activities, there seems to be some areas in which EPA's efforts at environmental protection coincide with the interests of the unions. Several of them listed their environmental concerns as being "occupational safety and health" issues. These unions seemed open to EPA efforts to protect the environment and welcomed improvements that those efforts made in their working conditions.

Thus, in communicating with the unions in Oregon, EPA faces two principle difficulties. First, there is the suspicion with which at least some members of this constituency view EPA's environmental protection efforts. Second, there is the general lack of knowledge most of these unions have about its specific activities. Counterbalancing this is the value which some of these unions place on EPA activities which make the workplace safer and healthier. Given the number of locals in the state, perhaps the best approach for EPA to follow would be to make contact with the County Labor Councils. These could pass information on to member unions thus making EPA's communication task somewhat easier.

What follows is an alphabetical index of those unions which responded to our questionnaires. It, in turn is followed by the profiles themselves.

Address	P.O. Box 4103 -- (President) P.O. Box 4824 -- (Director of Human Relations) Portland, OR 97208 (503) 236-9113
Contact Person	Ronald Rasmussen, President Jeffrey D. Sehorn, Director of Human Relations
Communication Tools	"The Portland Poker" (local newsletter) "The American Postal Worker" (national newsletter)
Organizational Information	The union ranges from local to national in scope. This chapter has approximately 1300 members and is directed towards the "(p)rotection and advancement of member rights and working conditions." They have other branch offices whose addresses can be obtained from the main office: Oregon Postal Workers Union Charles E. Lemmon, Director of Human Services P.O. Box 4613 Portland, OR 97208 (503) 665-2449
Environmental Concerns	The Union states that concern for the environment is "not realistically one of our priority matters". They are interested at a level "...of being individuals and a viable part of the community." Official positions would be taken by the Office of Human Relations, but as it is newly created, its activities within the community are still rather limited. However, its Director is very interested in being placed on the mailing list for EPA information.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Air Quality, Toxic Substances, Water Quality, Solid Waste, Noise, Pesticides, Radiation, and Drinking Water.

MINORITIES

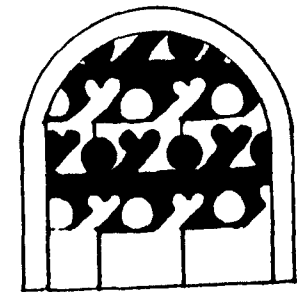

OREGON MINORITIES

We have identified about 40 minority organizations in Oregon. To the best of our knowledge this is the first centralized list ever compiled of these organizations. For that reason, it is no doubt incomplete, especially in listing smaller organizations. However, it does include the major Black, Native American, Asian American, and Hispanic groups. This introduction to the Minority Constituency in Oregon provides some general background about minorities in Oregon, the problems they face, and a discussion of their environmental concerns based on the responses of minority organizations to our questionnaire and telephone conversations with minority leaders.

There were 2,396,100 people living in Oregon in 1977. Of these, 1.3% were Black, 1.7% were of Hispanic origin, .6% were Asian American, and .4% were Native Americans. The Asian American population is probably considerably larger today since an estimated 13,500 Asians have arrived as refugees since 1979. Most of these minorities live in the urban centers of the Willamette Valley.

Each minority group in Oregon has its own individual concerns, but there are a number of shared problems. One concern is a general decline in the quality of life for minorities living in Oregon. This observation is based on several factors. Employment has been and continues to be a priority for minority groups. Unemployment rates for minority individuals continue to be much higher than the state or national average. In Portland, for example, the unemployment rate for young minority people has gone as high as 40%. This situation is said to have widespread impact and is considered a factor in the high rate of minorities in prisons, the increase in the birth rate among young minority women, and the large number of minority people depending on governmental subsidies. Affirmative action plans and other attempts to increase minority employment have been criticized as minimally effective. Even these efforts face the probability of cutbacks in light of present attitudes toward governmental expenditures. Minority groups fear that their problems will be relegated to an even lower priority in the coming years.

The above problems are not new, but they have been underlined by a recent development in Oregon which has caught the attention of many minority leaders. An atmosphere of racial intolerance has been building over the last couple of years and in the last six months has surfaced in the form of racial harassment and violence. Minority leaders believe that this is partly attributable to a resurgence of white supremacist attitudes and partly due to interracial tension. The influx of Asian refugees and the cutback in human services programs have also increased tensions among minority groups as they compete for scarce resources.

The overwhelming observation of minority groups is that, despite some actions by the government, attitudes towards minorities have not improved and their plight is just as pressing now as it has been in the past. With so many survival issues confronting minority groups in Oregon, environmental concerns are of lower priority. For instance, none of the minority organizations that responded to our questionnaire has had previous contact with the EPA, and only three of them could list any EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed. The main environmental concerns these organizations expressed were in the areas of health, pesticides use, and timber management. These came primarily from Native American organizations concerned about protecting their own natural resources and from Hispanic groups whose members work as migrant laborers in fields sprayed with pesticides.

There is no one group that speaks for all ethnic organizations. However the Metro Human Relations in Portland would be able to reach the key people within the various organizations. A greater problem in reaching these organizations, however, is their preoccupation with the more immediate problems that confront their members. It will be difficult for EPA to overcome this preoccupation.

What follows is an alphabetical index of the minority organizations in Oregon that responded to our questionnaire. It is followed by their profiles.

UBLIC INTEREST

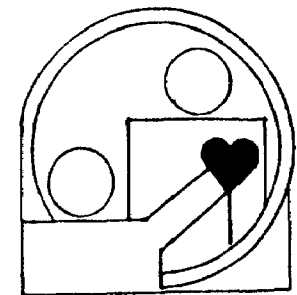

OREGON PUBLIC INTEREST

The Public Interest Constituency Group is the hardestst of the nine constituency areas to define. In preparing our list of organizations in this area, we took the term public interest literally and included on our list any organization whose primary activities seemed intended to benefit the community at large. This has resulted in a diverse list that ranges from the Community Skills Bank to the Portland Jaycees, and from the American Civil Liberties Union to the Taxpayers Association of Oregon. We have included approximately 100 organizations in this list, but that could easily be expanded. What follows is an introduction to this constituency group and its environmental concerns.

For the majority of these Public Interest organizations, environmental issues are tangential to their main concerns. For instance, the Friends Service Committee deals with community education on local and world issues and the Volunteer Bureau of Portland deals with community services; neither deals directly with environmental problems. As a result, these organizations have had little direct contact with the EPA and no knowledge of its activities.

There are, however, some Public Interest organizations which are either concerned about EPA's activities or which are directly or indirectly affected by them. They include research or information sharing groups, such as the Oregon Consumer League and the Pacific Northwest Research Center, and groups such as food co-ops, which are concerned about the impact of EPA rulings on their activities. These organizations are generally supportive of EPA. They agree with EPA's restrictions on field burning, their banning of 2,4,5-T, regulations on pull tab cans, and efforts to improve air quality.

Although at least some members of this constituency groups are supportive of environmental protection efforts, as a group these organizations will be very hard to reach. There is no centralized organization that speaks for, or is in contact with, many members of this constituency and there is little interconnection among members. Given these facts, EPA efforts might be concentrated on communicating with those members of this constituency who clearly want to involve themselves in environmental issues. Attempting to reach the constituency group as a whole would require tremendous effort.

Organizational Information	The League is a state-wide organization designed to protect the consumer in the market place using education, legislation, and research. There are approximately 300 individuals and 15 organizations that belong to the League. There are plans for two branch offices, one to be located in Eugene and one in Salem.
Environmental Concerns	The environmental issues the League is concerned with are: "recycling, efficient gasoline usage, use of ethanol (gasohol), and efficient heating methods." Its members have come out in support of recycling garbage, the use of gasohol and oppose the use of plastic non-recyclable milk jugs. They support the EPA's experiment with a four day work week in Seattle and also approve of the air pollution control standards and the proposal that municipal water supplies publish the sodium content of the water they supply to the public.
EPA Program Areas of Interest	None stated.

URBAN

OREGON URBAN

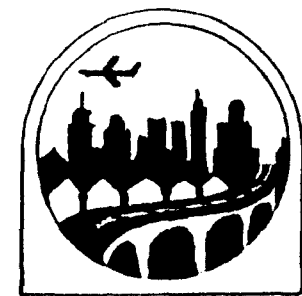

There are approximately 160 organizations on our list of Urban Groups in Oregon. By far the majority of these are neighborhood associations from the major cities of Portland, Eugene, and Salem. Also included are community action councils, community centers, and those few organizations that study urban problems. What follows is a summary of the problems facing these neighborhoods and an overview of their environmental concerns.

Over the last few years urban groups have become an active element in Oregon's political and social scene. There are some such groups in Eugene and Salem but the largest and greatest number of them are located in Portland. Some neighborhood associations are over 10 years old, and observers believe that the significance of these organizations will continue to grow.

Part of this growth is attributable to the large percentage of Oregonians living in urban areas. More important is the fact that these groups and associations provide citizens with avenues for meaningful participation in the life of their city. Many national problems evoke a feeling of helplessness, but neighborhood associations, by successfully dealing with local problems, have demonstrated to people that they can effect their immediate environment. This may explain the optimism present in many of Oregon's neighborhoods. Over 3/4 of Portland's residents expect their neighborhood to either be a better place to live or to at least stay the same over the next five years.

Neighborhood associations and urban groups in Oregon differ in two major respects from their counterparts on the East Coast. First, they deal with problems of a lesser magnitude than those existing in the older Eastern cities. Second, Eastern neighborhood groups are often faced with resistance from government officials and have to fight systems of entrenched power to get their problems solved. Oregon groups, on the other hand, do not face those kind of deeply rooted obstacles. Their emphasis is on cooperating with government officials to improve their neighborhood or city environment.

Each neighborhood and city in Oregon has its own priorities. The most commonly mentioned ones are street paving, lighting, parks, planning, and traffic. In the past, neighborhood associations have been largely reactive in dealing with these problems. Now, as they grow more aware of the interrelated nature of many of the problems they face, some are initiating positive plans of action to deal with these problems.

Urban

One criticism of neighborhood associations is that their scope is too narrow and that they act only for their own interests which may be to the detriment of the city as a whole. Whether this is a valid criticism or not, it is true that these groups are primarily local in scope. Consequently, while many of the groups express concern for the environment, these concerns mainly relate to the environment of their immediate area. Most of these organizations are not in touch with EPA actions or regulations. This was evident in the questionnaire we collected.

Of the urban organizations that responded to our questionnaire, only one has been in contact with the EPA and only two could comment on EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed. Typical was the response of the Southeast Uplift Advisory Board which conceded to having only "limited knowledge of EPA actions." However, despite this limited awareness of EPA, many of these organizations expressed strong concerns about environmental problems. The issues of land use, sewers, air and noise pollution, and energy use received a considerable emphasis in their questionnaire responses.

Although urban organizations are concerned about environmental protection at least in their neighborhoods, it may be difficult for EPA to communicate with these groups effectively. This is because, at this time, there is no umbrella organization which represents the many different urban groups in the state. Therefore, EPA would have the difficult task of trying to reach these groups individually. What might prove more effective would be to contact these groups when an EPA ruling or hearing might effect their community. This approach would limit the number of groups to contact to a more manageable number and would increase the likelihood that they would want to be involved.

What follows in an alphabetical list of those urban organizations which responded to our questionnaire. It is followed by the profiles themselves.

Name of Organization	SOUTHEAST UPLIFT ADVISORY BOARD, INC.
Address	5224 S.E. Foster Road Portland, OR 97206 (503) 777-5846
Contact Person	Robert Olds, Staff Coordinator Grover Sparkman, Chairman
Communication Tools	"S.U.N.N." (area wide newsletter) several neighborhood newsletter
Organizational Information	This organization operates on a local level and has as its members 20 neighborhood associations and members at large who want membership on the Board apart from a neighborhood association. They are primarily interested in neighborhood associations and areas of public interest.
Environmental Concerns	"Land use is an important function of the Board. This involves reviewing requests for zone changes, revocable permits and conditional use permits and providing the city with recommendations from neighborhood residents." By virtue of these functions, the Board must necessarily take positions on environmental issues. As an example, they did not support a recycling center because the location was considered "bad." "The Board has not considered environmental issues beyond land use, but would if requested."
EPA Program Areas of Interest	Noise.

WOMEN

OREGON WOMEN

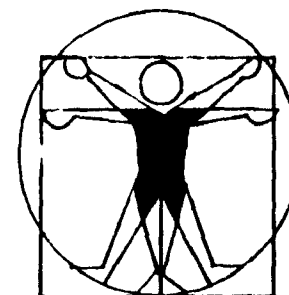

We have identified 75 organizations in Oregon whose membership is composed primarily of women or which focus on women's issues and problems. This introduction to the Women's Constituency will look at the diversity of the organizations involved, their environmental concerns, and the difficulties involved in communicating with such a diverse constituency.

Out of Oregon's total population of 2,396,100, slightly more than half - 1,226,000 - are women. They represent 40.2% of the state's labor force. Out of an estimated 907,000 households in Oregon, 338,000 are single-head households, many of which are headed by women. Few generalizations can accurately be made about women in Oregon. Women's organizations represent a wide spectrum of values, ideas, and interests; interpretations of the problems, issues, and futures faced by women vary greatly.

Given this diversity, women's organizations can be divided into two very general categories: those that are primarily concerned with women's problems and issues, and those that have some other focus. The first category includes women's resource centers, women's rights organizations, and consciousness-raising groups. The concerns and interests of these organizations are perhaps best represented by the Governor's Commission on Women, established in 1964. It has worked to promote social, legal, political, and economic equality for women and speaks for many of the moderate and liberal women's groups in the state.

In the second category of women's organizations are groups, such as professional organizations and the League of Women Voters, whose primary emphasis are on education and community service. Unlike those in the first category, these groups have no central theme or overall coordinating body and so have little, if any, ongoing contact with each other.

Those women's groups that responded to our questionnaire had little direct knowledge of EPA and its activities. In fact only two out of 10 could comment on EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed. However, most of these groups did express concern about environmental problems and a desire to learn more about them. Those which commented about EPA were concerned with toxic chemicals and supported the banning of 2,4,5-T. Those not familiar with EPA did express support for environmental protection in general terms, such as the need for careful urban planning and the maintenance of a safe, healthy environment.

Although women's organizations are generally supportive of environmental protection, they will be hard to reach. Aside from the Governor's Commission on Women, there is simply no group that is at all representative of the wide variety of women's organizations. Therefore, given EPA's limited time and resources, efforts to reach this constituency group might best be focused on such easily identifiable and potentially active organizations as the AAUW or the League of Women Voters. Attempts to reach the wide diversity of smaller women's groups would require a great deal of effort.

What follows is a list of women's organizations that responded to our questionnaire. It, in turn, is followed by the profiles themselves.

YOUTH

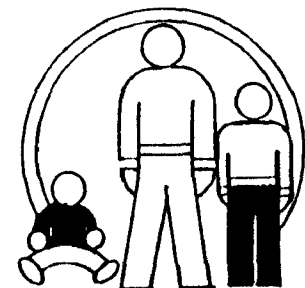

OREGON YOUTH

We have identified approximately 70 Youth Organizations in Oregon. In addition to these, there are a myriad of church youth programs which are simply not compiled in any centralized listing and which seem too small and transitory to be effectively reached by the EPA. What follows is a brief summary of youth organizations in the state, a look at some of the concerns of young people, and a listing of their environmental concerns.

The Youth Organizations in Oregon can be divided into two categories: those designed to provide services such as counseling or job training and those traditional youth groups such as the YMCA, YWCA, Boy Scouts, and Girl Scouts which involve young people in various activities. Total numbers of young people involved in these organizations are hard to come by, and obtaining an overall view of the concerns of young people is even more difficult.

Some idea of the attitudes of young people in Oregon can be gleaned from the "1980 Report on the Opinions and Experiences of Oregon Youth" published by the Governor's Commission on Youth. It was compiled from questionnaires sent to junior and senior high schools throughout the state and is considered to be the most representative survey available. According to this survey, economic issues such as inflation, unemployment and, on a more individual level, preparing for a career are the top concerns of young people. Second were such international issues as national defense, the Iranian crisis, nuclear war, and relations with Russia. Environmental conditions were listed as a problem facing the state of Oregon as was the depletion of the state's timber resources, but these environmental concerns are clearly outweighed by worries about the national economy and personal job security.

The 10 responses that we received from Youth Organizations reflect a lack of specific knowledge about the EPA and its activities. None of these organizations has ever contacted EPA nor could any of them list any EPA actions with which they agreed or disagreed. However, several respondents like the Columbia River Girl Scout Council emphasized that their "program has strived to instill a sense of appreciation and responsibility for our environment." Thus, many of the traditional youth organizations believe in environmental protection even if they are unfamiliar with the specifics of EPA's activities.

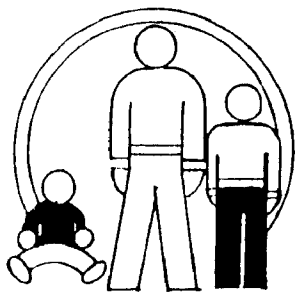

Youth

Reaching youth groups poses a challenge. The Governor's Commission on Youth which is the most centralized youth organization is primarily an information gathering rather than information disseminating agency. In the absence of a central youth organization, the EPA will have to contact youth groups individually and to educate them on environmental issues relevant to them. This will require a great deal of time and effort.

What follows is an index of the youth organizations that responded to our questionnaire. It is followed by the profiles themselves.
